A Letter From The West.

RAILROADING.

The original word travail, to toil, from which our English word "travel" is derived, certainly finds little significance in the sumptuous day-coaches and parlor-cars of modern railroads.

Steel rails, patent bars, easy road-beds, elegant and richly furnished depots; cars heated by steam, furnished with patent brakes, buffers and couplers, and all the latest and most approved appliances and appointments on the outside, together with all the convenience, comfort and elegance which genius and the decorative art can furnish on the inside, makes the "travel" of to day more of comfort than of toil, more of pleasure than of pain. While for safety, statistics of accidents, in proportion to the number of travelers, show that a man is less in danger on the railroad than at home.

Riding, by day, in the soft embrace of patent reclining chairs and leisurely eating at tables spread with every luxury, in elegant dining cars, while being borne over the country with the speed of the wind, and resting, by night, in sumptuous, wide-berthed and well ventilated sleepers, where one disrobes at ease, makes railroading in this western world of science wonders superior to anything of the kind in the east, and shows a marvellous change since anti-railroad days.

In the depots of many if not all the trunk lines leading out of Chicago, you find placarded in large letters, at the gateway as you enter the train, the price of seats in the parlor-cars and of meals in the dining cars, all of which are reasonable, considering the accommodations afforded.

At Omaha, Nebraska, where the Union Pacific Railroad commences, the dining cars are left behind. But all passenger trains stop three times a day at regular eating stations, where substantial meals are obtained for seventy-five cents each. Tables are also set and spread with cloths, by the accommodating porters, in the sleeping cars, for all who carry their own lunch, which is by far the most comfortable as well as economical way of eating on a railroad. With the exception of the dining cars, every possible facility and comfort is afforded the traveler on the U. P. R. R. Even on the narrow gauge road of the Northern Utah Line, operated by the Union Pacific, the same is true as to elegance and accommodations. The cars are new and furnished with all modern conveniences. This road runs from Ogden, Utah, to Helena, Montana, about five hundred miles, through the country of what (some fifteen years ago) was the home of formidable and hostile Indians, and to avoid whom, the early emigrants to Montana, after traveling nearly fifteen hundred miles, across the plains and mountains, from Omaha, by stage or with their wagon trains, were compelled to add four or five hundred miles more to their journey, by passing round through the valley of the Yellowstone, on the east, or by way of Salt Lake, on the west.

Now, the traveler sees scarcely a wigwam of Indians in the entire journey and "the noble red man of the West" is fast becoming a thing of the past. The narrow gauge of this road enables it to run up and down the canyons and climb the mountain grades with greater facility. It occupies scarcely more space than a foot path along the side of a mountain, up which the plucky little engines will draw long and heavy trains.

Shades of the past! What a contrast between the railroading of to-day and the first steam railroad in America, running from Albany to Schenectady, a distance of seventeen miles, and going at the rate of seven or eight miles an hour; a train composed of two each bodies set on car wheels, running on iron train ways. The engine was built in London, had a five and a half inch cylinder and a sixteen inch stroke. It was followed by a little tender carrying two barrels of wood for fuel dan among the adventurous sixteen on that trial trip, in 1831, was a young man, nineteen years of age, named Sidney Dillon, who is now the president of the Union Pacific R. R.

Even greater is the contrast between the steam travel of to-day and the old fashioned when "the old timers" used to ride across the country at the rate of one hundred miles daily and keep it up, night and day, for a month, bumping over stumps, dragging through mud holes, climbing up mountains and sliding down canyons; often with no possibility of sleep until exhausted nature would seek momentary respites at the changes of horses, when the weary passengers would get out and stretch themselves on the ground, to sleep till wakened for a fresh start. These days are passed. Staging is still kept up and always will be, to some extent in this country, in climbing up to mining camps where railroads cannot go, or in penetrating the interior, in advance of railroads. But they are only for short trips of one and two hundred miles.

The stage roads in this country are quite primitive. The first man that drives over the country picks out what he considers the best route and all the rest follow his track until it gets so bad they have to strike out a new one. In the mountain passes and canyons they are compelled to do a little excavating and filling, to make the road passible. No western stage road that I have seen would do special credit to a commissioner of streets in any eastern city. The horses are changed about every fifteen miles, are usually driven in teams of four or six and at the rate of six or seven miles per hour on an average.

The vehicles are Concord coaches, i.e. they are doubtless built at Concord, N. H., but they are not the Concord coaches of the East. They weigh two tons and over a piece, are covered with canvas and in a thaw with mud, resembling "mud wagons" more than coaches. They have no doors, but a square flap of canvas is rolled up on each side and through this little hole the passenger crawls and his bundles are chucked in after him. Hand baggage is not charged extra but regular baggage, over forty pounds, is five and six cents a pound, hence the tendency of travelers in this country is to cumber themselves with a good deal of hand baggage. As the stage journey is apt to be lengthy, it begins, at this season of the year, before daylight and the sensation is a little queer at first when you crawl, in the darkness, into a stage coach and find yourself sprawling round in the midst of bundles and squirming humanity, mingled with profanity and the fumes of rum and tobacco smoke. But you soon get wonderfully used to it. The proper way to prepare for a ride on these mountain coaches is to wear a buffalo coat, take a buffalo robe to cover your nether extremities and don a soft hat. Woe betide a stovepipe hat in a western stage coach. You sometimes leave your seat so suddenly that you get the impression the top of the coach has come down and hit you on the head.

Raymond's annual excursion to Washington will start the 10th inst. from Boston, and if any of our readers desire to visit the Capital this winter, an opportunity is afforded by which the excursionist can see Washington as he could not see it alone. Those from this town who have participated in the Raymond parties need not be reminded of the advantages of traveling this way; the accommodations are first class, all meals and transfers are included so that one knows beforehand just how much money is required. A ten day's trip has been arranged. They will leave Boston Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 10th, by the famous Norwich line, connecting with the "City of Worcester." They will stop at Hagerstown, Maryland, over Thursday night, and the following day will visit the Luray Caverns, in Luray, Va. They will arrive in Washington Saturday morning, stopping at the four leading hotels there, as they may be assigned, until Thursday. On their way home, they will remain over night at Harrisburg, Pa., and will arrive in Boston Saturday forenoon. The price of the entire excursion has been placed at $50. and excursionists are advised to send their names at once to Mr. Raymond, 240 Washington St., Boston. Send for a pamphlet giving full particulars.

The State Legislature convenes to-day.

Coal stocks are going down—in the bins.

Storekeepers are taking account of stock.

We wish our readers a HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Now calleth the collector with his little William.

On all sides we hear "what beautiful weather."

John Holt's pet dog was killed recently on the railroad track.

The time for paying of bills is at hand, the pleasantest of the year.

Mr. Henry Dunney now of Meriden Conn., was home for the holidays.

Ice men are busy. This season could well be called the "crystal harvest."

Public schools were closed during last week, but commenced again yesterday.

Did you expect what you received, and did you receive what you expected?

Now is the time to subscribe for a good magazine or newspaper, at Hewitt's.

Eagan & Kelley made a present of a cash gift to each of their employes Christmas.

Mr. Frank Wilson has caught over three hundred pounds of eels thus far this season.

Rev. S. P. Smith, of Marblehead, was confined to his house last week with sickness.

"As the days begin to lengthen the cold begins to strengthen," so the old adage says.

The PRESS will start on its voyage for 1883, with a larger subscription list than ever before.

Mrs. Isaac Furbush died quite suddenly yesterday. She had been unwell for some time.

The Boston, Revere Beach and Lynn railroad has declared a dividend of three dollars a share.

Here's a happy new year, reader, to you and yours. May it bring health, wealth and happiness.

Lots of the young folks sat up Sunday night to "watch the old year out and the new year in."

A lad named Roach fell from a load of lumber on Holten street last Friday, and sprained his ankle.

Mrs. Dr. Elliott has secured a position as school teacher and intends to soon leave town for the West.

If the postal service affords a fair indication, the gift season was never so universally observed as this season.

Mr. Thomas E. Wilson is building an addition in the rear of his machine shop to accommodate a new and larger boiler.

The horse on the horse hose carriage fell down again this morning, when starting for the fire, and broke a shaft.

It may be proper to throw coal, ashes, oyster shells and other refuse into the public streets, but we don't believe it.

Miss Celia Nickerson, inspirational speaker, will occupy the platform on Sunday Jan. 8th afternoon and evening.

Mrs. Wm. Pickering was stricken with a paralytic shock yesterday, and still remains in an unfavorable condition.

The two Charles', Sanborn and Bliss of this town, drew the bird cage at the Newburyport Odd Fellows' fair, last week.

Officer Parker took the two children of James Claxton, who is at the County House, to the Woburn poor house last Monday.

Patrick Mahoney, who does quite a business in the line of provisions on Walnut street, has moved into the basement of his new house.

Distin & Howley have an announcement of particular interest to gentlemen. Don't forget them when you want goods in their line.

Chas. L. Titcomb, of Salem, and Augustus Harrington have formed a co-partnership for the purpose of carrying on the currying business.

District Deputy Grand Master, S. S. Littlefield, of this town, will install the officers of Danvers Lodge, No. 150, I. O. O. F., next Tuesday evening.

Young friend, as you begin the new year, bid good bye to those evil associates who are fast leading you into paths where nothing but misery is found.

A "pair of New Year's slippers," is what was said of a couple of inebriated individuals, who were perambulating along the sidewalk, last Monday morning.

Otis L. Perkins will soon build a house on Highland Park. The cellar is being built by Danvers parties. Simon Buxton is building a barn on the same street.

A party was in town last week from New York state, prospecting for a store to open a ready-made clothing house, and as to the chances of doing a business in that line here.

The Unity Club held its regular meeting at the house of Rev. Mr. Hudson last Monday night. The evening was devoted to literary and musical treats rendered by its members.

The Red Ribbon Reform Clubs of Massachusetts will hold their next reunion at Reform Club Hall in Worcester, Tuesday, Jan. 16th, closing with a mass meeting in the evening.

The readings of Miss Alice Newton, generously given for the benefit of the W. C. T. Union last Thursday evening, gave great pleasure to all present, and a neat little sum was netted the Union.

Peter Sim has opened a new store on Congress street, Boston, for the sale of sheepskins. Mr. Sim is at present doing a very large business, employing some ninety hands. We hope his new venture will prove a success.

Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, whose "phiz" has adorned the columns of this paper in common with most of the papers in the country, recently suffered a paralytic shock, but is recovering.

Our townsman, J. Henry Osgood, manufacturer of printers' rollers, has our thanks for a supply of very neat and pretty calendars, issued from his place of business, No. 3 Bath street, Boston.

A lady reader showed us the other day, a sprig of mistletoe, which had been sent from the South. The deep green and the waxy texture of the small white berry make a very pretty contrast.

The old fashioned spelling school advertised to take place at Peabody Institute has been given up, as there was but one entry, and that a newspaper man, Brother Woodbury of the Gloucester Bulletin.

Mr. Frank C. Ferguson, while about his work recently, was lifting some heavy boards on a horse, when they dropped from his hand and striking his toe nearly removed the nail besides severely jamming it.

Mrs. Walden, a lady who has been in town but a few weeks, had her pocket picked in the railroad station at Boston, Christmas day. Her pocket book was taken from her pocket, but it contained less than two dollars.

People that still depend upon their cisterns for water are getting apprehensive on account of the lack of winter rains and the consequent limited supplies. Better hitch on to the street mains if you have a chance.

Our readers will recognize the hand of Rev. L. L. Wood in the letter from the West, a portion of which will be found in this issue. It was received some weeks ago, but the pressure on our columns prevented its publication.

Mr. John Linehan has recently refitted his coupe. It has been newly lined, upholstered, and painted. It will seat four persons comfortably and is just the thing to run to Salem after the theatre train, or for any work of that kind.

Maggie, an eleven year old daughter of the Widow Murphy, in attempting to cross Main street near Grove, last Friday, was run over by a team driven by two boys, who drove on without stopping to render any assistance. The little girl was considerably bruised.

Sir Isaac Newton of Middleton, and who claims to be a near relative of the great philosopher and scientist, was in town Saturday, and got most "gloriously" drunk. Still he wept like a crocodile because a boarding house keeper refused him lodgings for the night.

Wm. F. Sawyer as District Deputy Grand Master, installed the officers of Essex Lodge No. 26, I. O. O. F., of Salem, last Monday evening. He will also install the officers of Fraternity Lodge, No. 118, this evening, and the officers of Union Degree Lodge No. 11 D. of R., on Thursday evening.

Wild & Stevens, manufacturers of printers' rollers, 8 & 12 Hawley street, Boston, send us their annual calendar for 1883. The junior member of this enterprising firm is Mr. Chas. P. Stevens, a native of Peabody and a brother of Mr. Geo. Stevens.

It is said that is was twenty seven minutes after the discovery of the fire last night before the alarm was given. Another evidence of the need of a fire alarm system in town.

Mr. Geo. H. Little is doing considerable in the way of putting steam heating apparatus into houses. He has recently been at work at a house in Newburyport. This style of heating is said to be less expensive than a furnace and requires less attention.

A woman named Hackett fell on the street last Sunday, striking her head on a stone and making a serious bump, but not breaking the skin. She was assisted to her home. This is the second fall she is reported to have had this season.

The Malden Mirror says, at a meeting of the school board, Miss Lizzie Lunt was elected teacher of the ninth class of the Belmont school in that city. Miss Lunt was formerly a Peabody young lady, and is a graduate of the Salem Normal school.

Mr. Arthur S. Gray, of Danvers, widely known in this town as a civil engineer and naturalist, is about to leave Danvers to establish himself in his profession at Cincinnatti. Mr. Gray recently delivered a lecture on "Shells," before the Danvers Scientific Association.

The state has been re-districted by the Grand Lodge of Masons, and this which was formerly the fifth, becomes the eighth and includes Danvers, Peabody, Beverly, Salem, Marblehead and Rockport, with A. Frank Welch, of Danvers, as District Deputy Grand Master.

Those beautiful and finely finished photographs at Bousley's, Salem, are much sought after. Have you ever visited his studio? If not, lose no time, but go at once and sit for a picture. Mr. B. does no cheap work, but turns out work that is a credit to himself and the subject of the picture.

The courts hold that mere slipperiness on a sidewalk is not a defect for which a town is liable in case of accident, but that if a ridge of ice is allowed to remain along the traveled part of a walk, or icy unevenness to remain, from which an accident results, the injured party if in the exercise of due care at the time may recover damages.

Miss M. J. Floyd has been appointed by the W. C. T. Union as Chairman of the Gospel Temperance Committee. During the month of January she will lead a meeting in their room, Sunday evenings, previous to the Church meetings. All who have faith in the Gospel, are invited to come, commencing next Sabbath, promptly at 6 o'clock.

About half past 9 o'clock last Sunday evening, there was a sudden flash and for a moment the whole heavens seemed to be illuminated, while in the southern sky was seen one of the most brilliant meteors possible to imagine. It burst like a rocket and for nearly half a minute its rapid course could be followed, while its color was constantly changing. Those who missed it lost a handsome sight.

We are in receipt of the register and circular of the State Normal School in Salem, for the fall and winter term of '83, in which we find the name of the following young ladies from this town: Class A, Georgie S. Hart, Annie Poland, Lelia I. Tilton, Jennie M. Whipple, Augusta S. Wilson; Class C, M. Ada Brown, West Peabody; Class D, Susan C. Elliot, Henrietta C. Sumner, Kate E. Wiley.

At a meeting of Washington Union, No. 38, E. A. U., Wednesday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Chancellor, George W. White; Advocate, Frank B. Hoag; President, George A. Whitney; Vice President, R. T. Zeigler; Auxiliary, John M. Bradford, Treasurer, George E. Lewis; Secretary, William B. Farrington; Accountant, James S. Paul; Chaplain, R. E. Smith; Warden, John Ruth; Sentinel, N. M. Quint; Watchman, S. C. Hewitt.

The Transit of Venus.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMSON.
(Written Dec. 6th.)

O Thought, how mighty is thy power!
We've dwelt with thee a transient hour;
Conversed until we nothing know,
While watching from our world below
Another world far off in space,
Go passing by the sun's bright face.

We talked together, Thought and I,
While Venus, silent travelled by—
Of all God's wisdom, care and love
O'er us, and worlds around, above,—
Of all the changes Time will bring,
Of all the new songs earth will sing,
Of all the wonders 'twill be wrought
In realms of action and of thought,
Before another, unborn race
Will watch her pass the sun's bright face.

Of all who dwell on earth to-day,
From cradled babes to men grown gray,
Aye, generations yet to be;
To live and toil and think as we,
Will in the dust forgotten lie
Before again she passes by,
Then those who mark her onward way,
As we have watched her course to-day,
Thought whispers me will fill our place,
To watch her pass the sun's bright face.

And then I wondered me again,
If there were wise and scholared men
From far-off Venus looking forth,
To note the motions of our earth,
While we would fain her wanderings trace
Away beyond the sun's bright face.

And then a stranger thought gave birth—
If when we go away from earth,
We'll dwell within some alien world,
Where clearer thought will be unfurled,
And never knowledge mark the brow—
We may be nearer then, than now,
When next fair Venus takes her way
Whence she has travelled by to-day,
Or, through the boundless realms of space,
Go with her past the sun's bright face.

Heart's Ease.

I knew her in her brightness,
A creature full of glee
As the dancing waves that sparkle
O'er a placid summer sea,
To her the world was sunshine,
And peace was in her breast,
For Contentment was her motto,
And a Heart's-ease was her crest.

Yet deem not for a moment
That her life was free from care;
She shared the storms and sorrows
That others sigh to bear;
But she met earth's tempests meekly,
In the hope of heaven's rest,
So she gave not up her motto,
Nor cast away her crest.

Alas! the many frowning brows,
And eyes that speak of woe,
And hearts that turn repiningly
From every chastening blow!
But our paths might all be smoother,
And our hearts would aye be blest,
With Contentment for our motto,
And a Heart's-ease for a crest.

Voices of the True-hearted.

Selected Story.

Plaintiff and Defendant.

Why they called it "The Tower," would have puzzled an archæologist. For it was not a tower, never had been a tower, and in all probability never had been intended for a tower.

It was a cottage, one-storied, straggling and comfortable, with a semi-circular parlor in front, which, topped off with a comical imitation of wooden battlements, was half-covered with waving sprays of woodbine and sheets of clinging ivy.

But "The Tower" it had always been entitled, and after that law-suit came up it acquired a sort of celebrity under the familiar name.

"Yes," said Miss Isidora Ives, "The Tower is mine still, and I intend to keep it. Everything else they have taken away from me, because some logger-headed old ancestor of mine signed his name to a deed 'John B. Robinson' instead of 'John C. Robinson.' As if one letter of the alphabet could make any difference! I've no patience with people! The majesty of law, indeed! Pshaw!"

"But if the rest of the property belongs to your Cousin Robinson, so does The Tower," suggested Mrs. Milroy.

"I can't help that," said Miss Isidora. "Here I am, and here I mean to stay, law or no law."

Mrs. Milroy opened her weak eyes. Feeble as a kitten herself, she could scarcely comprehend such valiant resolution in another.

"But if they come here with a sheriff and a posse comitatus and a writ of habeas corpus," she faltered.

"Then," said Miss Isidora, "They'll have to clear out again. Common sense is common sense. The house is mine, and I mean to keep it. I've got new bolts and bars to all the doors, and I keep a kettle of boiling water on the stove night and day, and my friend, Mr. Jeffreys, who is a clerk in a law-office, has given me the hint never to let in a man with a bag."

"Why not?" breathlessly questioned Mrs. Milroy.

"Don't you see," said Miss Isidora, snappishly. "Because it will be full of law-papers, writs and summonses, and all that sort of a thing."

"Oh," said Mrs. Milroy.

Thus acting upon the hint, Miss Isidora turned the plumber's man away, and resolutely declined to have anything to say to the book-agent and tract-distributer. She considered herself in a state of siege, took her morning's milk into the window with a tin pail and a chain, communicated with the tradespeople from behind two square inches of doorway, and took everybody she did not know for an enemy. The Tower was hers, and The Tower she meant to keep. And Rebecca, her little maid, was stricken with breathless admiration of her mistress' warlike qualities.

"But of course, ma'am," said she, "nobody can stand against the law."

"I'll see whether they can or not," said Miss Isidora Ives. "Be sure you keep the kettles well-filled, Rebecca, and don't let the fires go out, day or night."

And whenever she received through the post a letter with a legal appearance, or an envelope crested with the firm address of Messrs. Tape & Stringham, her Cousin Robinson's lawyers, she invariably poked it between the bars of the grate and smiled vindictively to see it blaze.

"What are we to do with such a case as this," said Mr. Tape, when he heard all this.

"Put in a sheriff's officer at once," said Stringham. "The woman is a trespasser, and has been, all her life."

"No, no, no," said Mr. Tape, blandly. "She's a woman. No harsh measures. It is Gideon Robinson's express injunction that all courtesy be shown to the defendant. We'll try something else before we proceed to extremities."

And one pleasant October afternoon, when the air was all blue mist, and the mist and the setting sun shone as through a medium of opaque gold, the landlord of the Toplady Arms came puffing up the hill with a stout, pleasant faced gentleman, and rang the bell, which echoed like a double chime through the tiny Tower.

"Go away," said Miss Isidora, from the window, spying the top of two hats.

"Oh, my, ma'am," squeaked Rebecca, over her shoulder. "Will I get the gun?"

"I beg pardon, ma'am," said the stranger; "but—"

"Go away, I say," sternly repeated Miss Isidora Ives. "Rebecca, bring in that kettle! I'll have you to understand that I am not to be trifled with."

But by this time, mine host of the Toplady Arms had simultaneously recovered his breath and his presence of mind.

"Miss Ives," he puffed, stentoriously, "don't be flustrated! It's only Israel Jenkins."

"Bless the man's heart," said Miss Isidora, "Why didn't he say so before? And what on earth do you want here, Jenkins?"

"It's a lodger, Miss Ives," said Jenkins, who had married Miss Isidora's old nurse, and somehow felt himself connected with the family.

"A—lodger," repeated Miss Ives, "This isn't a lodging-house, man alive."

"Yes'm—I'm quite aware of that," said Israel, meekly. "And where no offense is intended, it's hoped as none will be took. But, knowing as you was all alone and unprotected—"

"I don't know what you call unprotected," brusquely interrupted Miss Ives. "I've got a loaded gun and a six-gallon kettle of boiling water here, and—"

"And," mildly went on Israel Jenkins, "This 'ere gentleman, a Mr. Marshall, of Alabama, wanted a pleasant lodging in the neighborhood, which meals could be took at Toplady Arms—though our apartments is all occupied with the gentry as come to fish and shoot, through October and November—and it might be a consolation to you, Miss Ives, to have a gentleman about the premises; and I could particular recommend him as very quiet and decent."

"Good gracious," said Miss Isidora. "Why don't the man speak up for himself? Is he deaf and dumb?"

"It would be a great kindness, ma'am," said Mr. Marshall, of Alabama, at this direct appeal.

Miss Ives hesitated.

"Well," she said at last, "I don't know that I've any objections. Rebecca, unbolt and unchain the door."

And so The Tower garrison was strengthened by an addition of one.

Of course, Miss Isidora Ives told Mr. Marshall the whole story before he had dwelt twenty-four hours behind the queer little wooden battlements of The Tower. Mr. Marshall listened quietly.

"Isn't it a clear case of swindling and extortion," she demanded, excitedly, with her short curls (parted on one side like a man's) all rumpled, her cheeks reddened, her plump fist unconsciously doubled.

"I should think so," said Mr. Marshall.

"And all because my great-grandfather's name was written John B., instead of John C., in the deed," persisted Miss Isidora. "Why, any school-boy would be ashamed to avail himself of an equivocation like that."

Mr. Marshall proved himself a quiet, peaceable member of the little household. He liked dogs, and allowed Miss Ives' King Charles spaniel to sleep, undisturbed, amid the papers on his table.

He was partial to birds, and entered at once into the most friendly of alliances with the parrot and macaw. He grafted Miss Isidora's orange-tree for her, and showed her a new way to train her wax-plant.

And at the end of four weeks, Miss Isidora put into execution a plan which she had long been forming.

"Mr. Marshall," said she, "It's a great deal of trouble for you to go three times a day tramping down the hill to Toplady Arms and back again. You are no longer a stranger to us here. We have learned to respect and trust you. If you choose to take your meals with us here, I shall be quite willing to admit you to my frugal table, as a friend."

Mr. Marshall's countenance changed oddly. He made a curious sound in his throat, as if he were swallowing something.

"Miss Isidora," said he, "I can't."

"Can't," repeated the lady.

"Nothing could induce me to eat salt under this roof," said Mr. Marshall, incoherently.

"Bless and save us! is the man mad," cried Miss Isidora Ives.

"I am, socially speaking, a fraud," said the stranger—"a forgery."

"Miss Ives sat down on the sofa, in a helpless way and stared at him.

"But your sweet graciousness and kindness have conquered me," said Mr. Marshall.

"What do you mean," said Miss Ives.

"Just this," said the stranger, "I am here on false pretences. I am your cousin, the plaintiff. My name isn't Marshall, but Gideon Marshall Robinson."

"Ma'am," whispered the heartless Rebecca, who had turned absolutely green on hearing the name of the family enemy, "shall I bring the kettle of boiling water?"

"Rebecca," said Miss Ives, "hold your tongue, and go out and feed the young turkeys. I am fully competent to manage this matter myself."

And Rebecca feeling herself put down departed.

"I came here," said Mr. Robinson, "to look into the facts of the case for myself. I have heard of your prejudices against me—"

"Yes, I should think so," interposed Miss Ives.

"And I do not blame you for them," said Mr. Robinson. Now that I am personally acquainted with you, Miss Ives, nothing could induce me to prosecute this—"

"Iniquitous claim!" interposed Isidora.

"Iniquitous claim!" acceded Mr. Robinson, with a repetition of the swallowing sound. "Just what you please to call it. I respect you as a lady, I appreciate you as a relative; but, of course knowing who I am, you can not longer tolerate me as your friend. I will pack my bag and depart and at once. I can only feel regretful that I have deceived you so long. I feel myself at heart a hypocrite and a swindler."

He waited meekly to receive the full tide of Miss Isidora's wrath. She put out her plump little hand, with four dimples in the four joints.

"Don't go," said Miss Isidora, in a low voice.

"What!" cried the incredulous plaintiff.

"There's no reason why we shouldn't be friends," said Miss Ives, in her odd, brusque way. "Things seem very different now that we are acquainted with each other. Couldn't we compromise?"

"Isidora," said Mr. Robinson, "we're cousins, you know, twice removed. I may call you Isidora?"

"Oh, certainly," said Miss Ives.

"We are the last two seeming heirs.'

"Plaintiff and defendant," nodded Isidora.

"Exactly so. Now, it has just occurred to me—I mean, I've been thinking of it for some time—that if we were to unite our claims—"

"To get married, do you mean," said Isidora, bluntly.

"Yes, precisely. It would put an end to all litigation," pleaded Marshall Robinson.

"So it would," observed Miss Isidora thoughtfully.

"Would you be willing to marry me," said Mr. Gideon Marshall Robinson.

"Y-yes," said Isidora. "I think I should. I'm not young, but then six-and-thirty is not absolutely old."

"You are a rose in full bloom," said Mr. Robinson, enthusiastically, "and I myself am not a mere boy, it must be remembered."

"And if people laugh at us, why, we'll let 'em laugh," said Isidora.

"And we'll laugh, too," said the middled-aged lover, cheerfully.

The fire was allowed to go down, the kettle-cover taken off, the charges drawn from the gun, and The Tower pronounced no longer in a state of seige.

And this was the way in which the famous case of Robinson vs. Ives, which ha promised to swell the fees of lawyers innumerable for the next ten years, was removed from the court-records. And no one was sorry except the legal gentlemen aforesaid.

A correspondent to an eastern paper in commenting on the newfangled pillow sham holders that have just been patented and thrust upon a long suffering people, says, in addition to many others things, that "the pillow sham is a nuisance any way, and should be abolished." This announcement will hardly be accepted as strictly correct, by the female portion of the population, and we don't know as it should. The correspondent is, no doubt, a man, though what a pillow sham ever did to man to cause him to rise up and denounce it, is more than we know. Of course, a pillow sham starched so stiff it will stand alone, is not a very nice thing for a man to jam his head against when he crawls into bed. But there is no question but what a woman can find a thousand and one reasons why the pillow sham should be perpetuated as a thing of beauty. The beautiful, clean, snowy white pillow shams, looming up at the head of the bed, and standing alone, look very pretty, and the lady of the house is greatly pleased with them. The men folks also find them very handy to keep the hair oil off the pillows, so their wives will not complain about the pillows being greased all over with hair oil. Men can escape all hard feelings liable to be engendered, by neglecting to take off the shams when retiring, and decking out the lovely linen and fine lace, used in manufacturing the shams, with choice and fragrant hair oil. And when he gets tired of having his ears sawed off, by coming in contact with the stiff linen and his cheek wore raw by the starch and lace, he can gently slide them to the foot of the bed and jam his feet against them to keep them from getting up in the night and walking all over him. Even the most energetic pillow sham will lose its energy and vital force after being stamped and crumpled at the foot of the bed under a man's feet. The pillow sham is not in any one's way, to any great extent, the men can get along with them and the women can't get along without them, so notwithstanding the efforts of the correspondent alluded to above, the pillow sham will not be obliged to go.—Exchange.

The holiday season takes a stronger hold of our people year by year, and its display of taste, its social amenities, charities and good cheer are more and better appreciated. This is as it should be. We have had nearly three centuries of hard, rough work, in the hard, rough soil of the new world and especially of New England, and it is not strange if our characters, as well as our hands, had been somewhat hardened and roughened by the experience. But we do not work for the sake of work. The Bible acknowledges that eating our bread in the sweat of our brow is a curse—but we work for the good results, for the improvement of all our surroundings, for better food, clothing, lodgings, education, refinement and happiness. We have at last attained such a measure of prosperty, through our unremitted labors that we can afford oftener to rest from them and enjoy their legitimate fruit. We think there is a more general observance of the recognized holidays this year than ever before. Holiday issues of books, magazines, pictures, cards and goods of every description for presents were never so profuse, elaborate and beautiful. Christmas decorations of houses, stores, churches and public buildings, and the preparations for the more general observance of Christmas services show that the grim puritanic element that was shocked at such things as savoring of Popery is now pretty thoroughly eliminated. It has been considered objectionable that the three principal holidays are crowded so near together; but we get a longer period for recreation, at a season when sleighing, long evenings, good fires contribute to festivity, and when, above all there is more call for the exercise of the virtue of charity towards the cold and hungry poor, and a gift in the holidays, when everybody gives cannot wound the pride of the poorest and proudest.

HER FIRST BABY.—We do not know how true this is, but a neighbor vouches for it, and it is as good as any of the adventures in the Spoopendyke family. A young mother who is rich in her hubby's affection and pocketbook is the owner of a three months old sunbeam. The young mother, to have the offspring receive proper nourishment resolved to take full charge of it. It was her first child, and having been reared in luxury, with plenty of servants to wait on her, she did not handle her contract with as much success as some other women. She undertook to give the child a bath in a small foot-tub. The mother of the lady, who lives with her, passing through the room, dipped her finger into the water, and told her daughter it was too cold for the little one, and that she would have to warm it. Instead of adding a little warm water, she placed the bath-tub with the baby in it on a small gas stove and waited further developments. The developments came as soon as the bottom of the tub began to get extra warm. The offspring gave one yell, while the fond mother, grandmother, and the two servants rushed to the rescue. The grandmother took the blessed baby and placed a handful of flour where it would do the most good. In the future grandmother will look after the child, while the mother reads up the cares of a mother and how to bring up children.—Essex Statesman.

A REAL NECESSITY.—We presume there is hardly a lady to be found in our broad land who, if she does not already possess a sewing machine, expects some day to be the owner of one. The household of a young wife is now considered incomplete without a sewing machine. Next to her lover the uppermost in the mind of the maiden just blooming into womanhood is a sewing machine. When asked by her parents or affianced what her Christmas or birthday present shall be the answer in a majority of cases is, "A sewing machine." But after the mind has been fully made up to purchase one of these indispensable articles, the question arises as to what kind of a machine to buy. It should be so simply constructed that the most inexperienced can successfully operate it. The other points mainly to be considered, and which are the most desirable, are durability, rapidity, capacity for work, ease of operation, regularity of motion, uniformity of tension, and silence while in operation. The "Light-Running New Home" fills the above requirements, and is said to combine the good points of all other machines, with the addition of many new improvements and labor-saving devices. The price is no higher than that of other machines, and every lady who is the happy possessor of one may rest assured she has indeed a treasure. All who send for the company's new illustrated catalogue and enclose their advertisement (printed on another page) will receive a set of fancy advertising novelties, of value to those collecting cards, &c. Their address is NEW HOME SEWING MACHINE CO., 30 Union Square, New York.

Our Patent Laws offer to American Inventive Genius a better protection than afforded by those of any other country, and at a much less price. This is but a deserved recognition of those contributing so largely to the welfare of our whole country, yet many inventors fail of reaping their just reward by not having their claims properly presented to the commissioners. This can only be done through an agent conversant with the workings of the government office, posted as to Patents already granted, and capable to advise as to the patentability of a new article, and the wisdom of procuring Patents therefor in foreign countries. As for many years past, we are pleased to commend to inventors Mr. R. H. Eddy, of 76 State Street, Boston, as a leading and most successful Solicitor of Patents; one whose long experience and familiarity with the laws and technicalities relating to American and Foregin Patents render him second to no living expert in his own particular line.

NEW LOCOMOTIVE.—The third of the new pattern of engines for the Narrow Gauge Railroad arrived Wednesday evening. It weighs 35 tons, and has all the latest improvements. Its driving wheels are four feet in diameter, three on a side, and its cylinders are fifteen inches in diameter. There is attached to all the running parts a patent gauged oiling cup, which can be gauged to any required amount. The water tank is double that of the old pattern, which enables the engine to run two trips if need be without stopping to water. There is also attached to the boiler two of Seller's improved injectors. The engine is provided with Ames' vacuum brake and is a fine-looking and serviceable engine.

AT A BAD TIME.—Commander J. B. Coghlan U. S. N. writes to us from the Navy Yard at Mare Island, Cal:—An enforced residence of two years in California made me the subject of most painful attacks of rheumatism. Consultation upon my case by eminent Naval and other surgeons failed to afford me the slightest relief. Dr. Hoyle recommended to me St. Jacobs Oil, the happy result of the use of which was my complete and wonderful cure.—Washington (D. C.) Army & Navy Register.

Book Notices.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for January, is a remarkably beautiful and interesting number. The opening article entitled "Artists, Strolls in Holland," is illustrated from drawings by the author and E. A. Abbey. The illustrations are what might be expected from such masters; and the article is so quaint and picturesque in itself as to make one wish that all descriptive articles might be written by artists. Ernest Ingersoll, as a writer, and A. C. Redwood, as an artist, co-operate in a most interesting representation of "A Redwood Logging-Camp"—full of pictures of the Coast Range region of California. Colonel Higginson continues his American history series, with a chapter entitled "The Old English Seamen." The article is beautifully illustrated. In fiction and poetry the Number is unusually strong. Austin Dobson contributes "The Ladies of St. James:" a proper new Ballad of the Country and Town illustrated by Abbey. J. T. Trowbridge contributes "Widow Brown's Christmas"—a New England story in verse—illustrated by Frost; and there are two Herrick poems, illustrated by Abbey. There is also a characteristic sketch by Charles Phelps, entitled "The New-Year's Log-Rolling." Mr. George William Curtis, in the Editor's Easy Chair, defends the good old Saxon custom of dining our English guests, discusses Mr. Spencer's views concerning America, points out the plutocratic tendencies of our time, especially in politics, and pays a tribute to the memory of the late Francis G. Shaw. The other Editorial departments are fuller than usual, and are well sustained.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE.—Lippincott's Magazine for January offers a very attractive list of contents, an earnest of what may be expected by its readers during the coming year. The first of two papers by Dr. Caspar Wister, gives an account of his cruise among the Windward Islands. A beautifully illustrated article on Colorado Springs, by G. R. Buckman, tells the story of the great enterprises undertaken in Colorado by the "National Land and Improvement Company," "John Brown at Dutch Henry's Crossing" is the title of a paper by Prof. Leverett W. Spring. "A Day in Tokio," by Charles Wood, is a bright and entertaining sketch, and there is a sensible and timely paper on Church-Music by Wm. Biddle. The opening chapters of the new serial, "The Jewel in the Lotos," by the author of "Signor Monaldini's Niece," will be read with avidity by the many admirers of this charming writer, while "Through the Storm," by Willis Boyd Allen, and "Mr. Holman Lunt's Prize," by Kate Upson Clarke, belong to the class of stories which may be welcomed among the regular enjoyments of the season. The Monthly Gossip is unusually full of entertaining matter on a variety of topics, and the book notices include a long list of holiday publications, and will assists purchasers in making their selections.

DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE begins the year brilliantly; the January number for 1883 being unsurpassed by any that have preceded it. The articles are of unusual interest, especially "How we Live in New York," by Jennie June; "Holiday Gifts and Customs in Paris," "Visits, and Manners at the Table," and "Current Topics," which is full of valuable information. Most of the shorter stories are remarkably well told, and, "The Admiral's Ward" keeps up its interest. Every department is carefully filled. The forty-five illustrations are excellent, among which is a splendid oil picture, "The Fisher Boy and the Fisherman's Daughter." No family will regret subscribing to this admirable magazine, as it supplies a household want, and is both useful and entertaining.

The ART AMATEUR for January fairly overflows with those designs, illustrations and practical suggestions for art work and home decoration which make this admirable magazine a welcome visitor in so many cultured American households. A portrait of the famous English etcher, Francis Seymour Haden; some striking charcoal and pencil sketches by Walter Shirlaw; a very interesting collection of miniatures by Cosway. The illustrations of Volkmar faience, artistic furniture and pianos, tapestry, needlework and jewelry are especially good. Practical articles on fan painting and art needlework are given. In the supplement sheets are full-size designs for a panel of cherubs' heads; apple-blossom decoration for a vase; birds and pine-needles for a cup and saucer; a four-page floral design from the Royal School of Art Needlework; part of an embroidered cope, and sixteen borders for prayer-book illumination. Montague Marks, publisher, 23 Union Square, New York. Price 35 cents.

"OUR LITTLE ONES." Moons wane, stars set, and even the hills grow old, but Our Little Ones is a publication that knows no such change. The January number is brighter and more charming than ever. Published by Russell & Co., Boston.

VICTORY! VICTORY!

ON SATURDAY, DEC. 16, 1882,

THE INDIAN

OPENED FIRE RIGHT AND LEFT,

SWEEPING ALL BEFORE HIM.

Some of the enemy attempted to rally, but in vain, too late, the hour is past,

THE INDIAN COMMANDS THE FIELD.

The arrows are sharp, they cut through Bone and Sinew.

The Piano Fortification a perfect failure, the INDIAN scatters them like chaff before the wind. Such a complete victory was never before chronicled in the History of the trade. While the battle was raging, boys were seen dashing along with sleds, singing the old familiar song—

NAUMKEAG IN THE WIND,
NAUMKEAG IN THE AIR,
NAUMKEAG CLOTHING EVERYWHERE.

The crowds of people who have purchased Clothing at our store in the past ten days is a flattering proof that the goods and prices are correct; in fact, our goods are marked so low that some of our competitors have bought from us, as they could save from 20 to 30 per cent. from wholesale prices by so doing.

As our space will not permit us to enumerate prices, call at our store and you will be convinced that our statements are correct.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

PUCK'S CARTOON on the "Dry Goods Store of the period," is a good illustration of the contrast in methods of conducting business at the present time. It is within the recollection of most of our readers that the innovations represented by Puck, began. In all the larger cities of the country the dry goods store is so only in name. It includes among its wares the products of every land, the manufactures of this and other countries in every department, and is apparently confined by no limits. It is the old fashioned country store enlarged and modernized. The first step in this progress was the abandonment of the large variety of goods kept in the country store, and the conducting of business by specialties. In time, as the business increased, once more the variety was increased, only in a larger and fuller measure, so that, to-day, it is not a store with a little here and there of the different varieties of goods, but a large and complete stock of every department which is represented.

There are advantages in this method. The housewife after making up her shopping memorandum, need not go from store to store, checking off an article here, buying another there, but in the majority of cases, all her purchases can be made at one store, under one roof. This of course applies only to our large cities. But the obvious tendency in the modern dry goods house is towards this method as far as it can be utilized. This centralization is seen also in other branches of business, and especially in the tanning business in this country. While the comparison is dissimilar in this respect, that the tanneries are mostly confined to their legitimate business, yet it is true that while years ago there existed throughout the towns of Vermont, New York state and Ohio, small tanneries, doing a lucrative business, in a small way, at the present time they are doing little or nothing, this branch of industry being monopolized by the larger tanneries, who work in more stock in a day than the smaller yards could do in a year.

Another advantage in these large establishments is the training of the employes for a successful business career. The tendency of the youth of this country is towards little preparation for an entrance into business—the secret beyond question of the numerous failures. The apprenticeshib which was once thought necessary to fit a young man for his trade or a knowledge of business is discarded, and after a few weeks or months of labor, he jumps, apparently, to the top round of the ladder. This cannot be effected so easily in the modern store of which we speak. The young man who would achieve success must learn the routine work; he must be imbued thoroughly with system, which pervades the entire establishment, and which is the foundation of its success. If he be fortunate enough to be at the head of a department, he will learn, by experience, of its value. If from a previous knowledge of that department in which he is placed he is called upon to enter the market a purchaser, he will find the value which a connection with such a house brings. For the disposal of his goods he has a market which the reputation of the house has built up; each department is a store in itself, yet a part of the vast whole; and in the selection of his goods he is able to avail himself of the credit of a large house. There is a vast difference between this and the purchases for a smaller store, and in the pursuance of this chosen work the young man enters a school of infinite value in his future career. Every possibility is open to him, and if in coming years he establishes for himself in business, he will have an experience which the old method of trade could not bring to him. We do not regard the caricature of Puck so much a caricature after all; it is but a fair representation of an existing state of things, brought about by the growth of our large cities, and the increasing wants and necessities of trade.

FOR THE past few weeks it has been hinted that the democrats would make the most of their party victory in Boston, and this is now made certain by the election of a new city clerk. Here is a case when, if at all, the principles of civil service reform, about which so much has been said, should have been observed. Mr. McCleary, the city clerk just displaced, has been a trusted and faithful official for thirty years. It is an office in which experience is an important desideratum. It should not be made a party office. We care not whether the late clerk was a republican or a democrat. If there were no reason for a change save to reward a party leader, it should not have been done. And this without any disparagement of the new clerk, who may be a capable and worthy man. But their new found party victory, so sweeping in its entirety, has made them not only ambitious to use it, but regardless of all consequences. We should all regret, — we should justly be indignant, should a sweeping democratic victory in our own town lead to the displacement of our faithful and efficient town clerk. Yet this is just a similar case. And it shows the fallacy of trusting to the democratic party for any reform in the civil service.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A settlement of the rivalry for Lynn business between the Eastern and Narrow Gauge railroads was made on Saturday at a conference of the managers of the two roads. The agreement is that the Eastern shall take off its five-cent East Boston trains and that both roads shall increase their fares between Boston and Lynn to twenty cents, or six tickets for one dollar. The season-ticket rates will be as established last October, fifteen dollars per quarter. At a special meeting of the directors of the Eastern Railroad held on Friday afternoon, Mr. Payson Tucker, Superintendent of the Maine Central Railroad, was elected General Manager of the Eastern Railroad, giving him the management of the line from Boston to Vanceboro. A most excellent appointment and one of the best ever made, Mr. Tucker being thoroughly familiar with every branch of railroad business.

It has already become evident that Senator Hoar is to have a hard fight for his re-election. Gov. Long has many friends among the new legislature and there are those who make bold to declare that if he is not the choice of the legislators, he is of their constituents. The attempt of some of the more ardent supporters of Hoar to throw mud at John D. Long because it is thought some of the democrats will support him in preference to Senator Hoar, is certainly ill advised. Long is as good a republican as Hoar. If he should be elected, and it could be said that democrats voted for him, would he be any the less a republican? Republican votes elected Gen. Butler. Does that make him a republican? It has been questioned whether it would be policy to leave the district from which Long has just been elected, to an unknown man. But we think Long should not be opposed because he has the support of a few democrats. The republicans are in a majority on the joint ballot, and we hope harmony will prevail in the choice of a Senator for the ensuing term.

Apropos of the above, the Woman's Journal comes out in favor of Senator Hoar because he is a friend of woman suffrage. For that reason he should be elected, and Gov. Long should not be. Here is consistency. No man for the past ten years, has been more pronounced in his advocacy of the rights of woman for the ballot than John D. Long. With either man in the Senate the movement would have a firm friend. Under these circumstances, we don't quite see why the Woman's Journal should trouble themselves about the matter.

Several of our exchanges have made improvements in their papers with the New Year. The Marblehead Statesman, of which Charles H. Litchman is publisher, announces that in future his paper will be changed to an eight page sheet, cut, folded and pasted like the PRESS. The Woburn Journal formerly owned by John L. Parker of the Lynn Item, is enlarged and appears in a new dress of type, of a larger size than before. The Journal is ably conducted under its new management, and brother Hobbs has our best wishes for his success. The New York Independent is also on our table in new type. It was always a good paper in typographical appearance. But it never looked as well as it does now.

The efforts of the Madison Square theatre management towards the elevation of the stage, and the removal of some of the objections to theatres, are to be strongly commended. The tendency among our first class theatres has been toward the presentation of plays of a better character, and of a higher moral tone. In this the Madison Square has been especially noteworthy. Hazel Kirke, Esmeralda and their other plays are free from any objection—either in their morals or expression. But they have gone farther. By the new revolving stage, causing a wait of but a few moments between the acts, they have removed the temptation open to young men to leave the theatre at these times. They have also refused to separate a man and wife, both being professionals, by placing them at long distances from each other, and as far as possible in the emotional parts of the play, the cast has been so arranged that opposite parts shall be played by husband and wife. Those who are disposed to attribute everything evil to the theatre and its people would do well to bear these facts in mind.

There is an aged couple living in Danvers, whom we desire to bring briefly to the notice of those who may not already know and respect them. Mr. Nathaniel Flint was born in Danvers, and is now eighty-four years old. He was one of eleven children, nine sons and two daughters. His mother made some pretension to skill in prophecy and foretold many times, when Miss Rachel Larrabee was a very young miss, that she would marry Nathaniel and that they would live very long together. The prediction has certainly been fulfilled for she is now Mrs. Rachel Flint aged 82 years. She was also born in Danvers. He has long followed the business of marketing. He has never made any extended journey while she has never been further from home than to Lynn Beach. Their experience has not been eventful when judged by the tear and hurry of modern days, and yet it is worthy of record, that after such a long life of work, they should be so well and strong. She still takes boarders and is not afraid to do her own washing. Nor has his life been wholly uneventful. If he never crossed the ocean or dabbled in stocks, or saw Langtry, or heard Talmage, he has still had his little episodes of excitement. He has been run over by the cars, was run away with and had three ribs broken, has been kicked by a horse, bitten by a hog and also by a mad dog. Several of our citizens were present at the celebration of their golden wedding. We sincerely hope that their strength may hold out to celebrate their diamond wedding. We shall certainly endeavor to be present so as to know how to manage our own.

The sad intelligence was received Monday afternoon that Samuel Calley, late Mayor of our neighboring city of Salem, had committed suicide. He had attended the inauguration ceremonies of Mayor Hill, his successor, had lain down his robes of office, and after dining with his daughter, Mrs. E. H. Noble, went up stairs, as was his custom, for a nap. Shortly after he was found hanging from a step ladder leading to the roof. Medical aid was summoned, but he was past their relief. Mr. Calley lost his wife about a year and a half ago, and since that time has been much depressed,—so much so that his family and friends have feared this result. His brother committed suicide in the same manner just before the war. He was first elected Mayor in 1872, on the prohibition ticket, and his efforts against the liquor traffic will be remembered. He was outspoken and firm in his convictions, and had many friends, especially among the firemen. It is said of Mayor Hill, that knowing his condition, he requested him, as a favor, to continue his morning visits to City Hall, thinking it would relieve his mind, which invitation was cordially accepted by Mr. Calley. He was in his 62d year, at the time of his decease.

The new year commenced with fatalities. An attempted suicide in our town, the suicide of Ex-Mayor Calley in Salem, the sudden death of the Hawaiin minister, E. Allen, at the New Year's reception of President Arthur in Washington, and the as sudden death of the street commissioner in Philadelphia, who fell dead about fifteen minutes before the meeting of the city government, which was to confirm or reject him. In addition we have the news of the death of Gambetta, the greatest statesman next to Theirs, in France. Enough, indeed for one day.

It is our sad duty to chronicle the death of our veteran deputy sheriff, Mr. Stephen Upton, who passed away yesterday at his residence, No. 44 Main street, after an illness of three weeks. No man in our town was probably better known; although advanced in years, he endeavored to discharge the duties of his office when other men would have faltered, and up to the time of his last illness those duties were not neglected. He was born in this town, in the very house where he died; his father was also a sheriff for nine years, before him. He was appointed deputy sheriff in Nov., 1822, and from that time, until his decease, with the exception of one year and three months, he held that commission, having received it from four successive sheriffs. He was for many years collector and treasurer of the town, before it was divided, and was in his younger days Adjutant of the Essex Hussars, which organization in the time of the war of 1812, escorted President Munroe on the road to Salem. Mr. Upton was a pewholder in the Unitarian church, and was also one time clerk of the parish. He was an active and efficient officer; in the performance of his duty he was brought in contact with all classes of citizens, and his task was oftentimes a disagreeable one; yet in all cases he acted with kind consideration towards those who were unfortunate enough to require his visits, as well as just toward those who employed him. His age was 87 years 11 months and 29 days. He leaves a son, J. Warren Upton, librarian at the Peabody Institute, and a daughter.

James P. Walsh, about thirty year of age and for some time past foreman of the night gang at Bragdon's bakery, while laboring under a fit of insanity attempted suicide by hanging himself to a bed post in his room at his residence on Wallis street, last Monday morning. He worked during the night as usual and upon returning home exhibited very violent temper towards his wife, and then taking a pair of suspenders went out in the yard, as is supposed, with the intention of hanging himself to the leather poles in the yard, but was followed by an inmate of the house. He returned and shortly after his wife heard a noise in the sleeping room over her head and running up stairs, she found her husband hanging to the bed post. She cut him down and called in the neighbors. Dr. Frost was sent for and restoratives administered. Walsh regained consciousness yesterday, and last evening again became very violent; so much so that officers remained with him over night. This noon he was removed to the police station and was to be taken to the Danvers Asylum as soon as the necessary papers were made out.

The Boston Journal of to-day pays the following well deserved compliment to Major Allen:

One of the smartest business men of his age is found in the person of Major Lewis Allen, President of the Warren National Bank of Peabody. He was 88 years old last July. For many years he has attended to the duties of President, and is to-day as lively and as sound of mind as a young man, and is apparently many years younger than his real age.

The Trustees have placed a new gas light in front of the entrance to the libraries at the Peabody Institute. A neat sign has been painted in the lower hall with a hand indicating the direction of the Eben Dale Sutton Library. The door leading into the Sutton has also been stained in imitation of black walnut.

The inmates at the Almshouse were presented with appropriate Christmas presents this year by Mary J. Floyd. They are also grateful to Alice Newton for an entertainment furnished there previous to her departure for the West.

Hose 3 and 4 took a ride last evening to the East End cottage in Swampscott, where a fine supper was enjoyed, after which speeches, story telling, etc., were in order. The boys report a good time.

The Boston Globe in a recent issue gave the pedigree and political views of the new legislature. Mr. Clark, our representative, is given as a license man.

C. Leonard Pierce lost a harness recently, it having been stolen from a buggy left in the shed.

PEABODY.

Prof. Richards gave his concluding lecture last evening, which was devoted to "Electricity." This principle was first discovered by one of the seven wise men of Greece, who happened to drop his amber pipe one day and picking it up rubbed it with his silk handkerchief to clean it and laid it upon the table. Some pieces of paper were instantly attracted to it. He thought it contained a spirit. It was impossible to define Electricity. It had been described as a "certain unknown force, acting in a certain unknown manner." No one could tell how far its powers extended; it was understood but little at present and great discoveries might be looked for in the near future. Prof. Richards briefly narrated the early discoveries, including those of Franklin in our own country and by the aid of a battery illustrated some of the discoveries of the past fifty years, during which time the science of Electricity had made its greatest advancement. The hall was darkened and the effect of the different experiments was very beautiful. Glass tubes of different forms were made to revolve with great rapidity by a small machine, and an electric light was sent into them, which gave them many different colors and as they revolved they took the forms of beautiful stars. The audience listened untiringly to the close although the lecture did not end until quarter of ten. The lecture committee are to be congratulated upon obtaining such an excellent course, upon a subject so little understood.

Fire was discovered shortly after three o'clock this morning at the Adams House (the old Naumkeag) on Washington street. The fire is supposed to have originated from a stove in the office. Mrs. Adams, wife of the proprietor, was first awakened by the smell of smoke, and quickly alarmed the house. The clerk started for the square giving the alarm. Steamer 1 and Hose 5 arrived about the same time, the former located at the hydrant opposite the burning building, but for some reason could not connect, and then drew their fires, after which they shifted to a hydrant above, and fuel was obtained from a neighbor's and their fire rebuilt. They were assisted by the members of Steamer 2. There was some delay as they could not connect the suction hose to the outlet on the hydrant and a reducing coupling was used. Hose 5 attached to the hydrant opposite the fire. Hose 1 and the Hook and Ladder arrived promptly, the former located at the hydrant near Allen's lane and both did good service. Hose 2 and 3 were with the steamer opposite Colfax street, and Hose 4 attached to the same hydrant. The house was a total loss as was most of its contents; although the building remains standing the inside and roof is completely burned out. The house was owned by Jas. E. Millea and run by Capt. Joseph C. Adams, formerly of Everett and Fairhaven, Mass. The house has quite a noted history which is familiar to most of our readers. It received its greatest prominence when owned by the late W. D. Smith, father of Dexter Smith, the well known music publisher. At that time it was known as Smith's Caravansary. The property was insured as follows: Jas. E. Millea had on building $2000 in the Royal of Liverpool placed with O. B. Chadwick & Co., he also had $400 on fixtures in the Firemen's of Newark, N. J., placed with F. E. Farnham. Capt. Adams had an insurance of $1200 through the same agency in the City of London. Capt. Adams estimates his loss at $2400. Nothing was saved and personal property of considerable value was destroyed. Mr. Millea will probably rebuild.

The elective and appointed officers of Jordan Lodge F. & A. M., will be installed this evening by Wor. Bro. J. C. Jodrey. The officers are as follows: W. M., S. A. Southwick; J. W., Edgar W. Upton; Treas., Calvin Pierce; Sec'y., Chas. H. Goulding; Chap., Rev. Geo. Walker; Marshal, Wm. C. Beckett; S. D., Lawrence Purtell; J. D., Wm. E. Francis; S. S., Jos. F. Wiggin; J. S., G. M. Fassett; I. S., Philip T. Nelson; Tyler, John Marshall.

Many well remember Mr. Chas. F. Hathaway, who spent a few years among us and afterwards moved to Cambridge, and will also regret to learn that he met with a painful accident on Christmas night. He was impersonating Santa Claus at his home for the amusement of his family when the garment that he wore, a robe of cotton, caught on fire, and before it could be extinguished he was severely burned about the head and hands. His brother was also burned in attempting to smother the flames.

The Essex Agricultural Society will hold its second Farmer's Institute of this season, at Town Hall, Ipswich, on Tuesday, Jan. 9th, 1883, at 9.30 A. M. "The relations and duties of farmers to society," will be the subject of the morning session, opened by Rev. Willard Spaulding of Peabody. And in the afternoon "Small fruits—their cultivation and sale," will be considered in a paper by John B. Morse of Concord. Discussions will follow each address, and all are invited to attend. Ladies are specially invited to attend. Free return tickets to points on Eastern railroad.

The installation of officers of Holten Lodge I. O. O. F., took place last evening, District Deputy Grand Master, Wm. M. Hill, (Salem's new mayor) and suite being in attendance. After the ceremony of installation, speeches were made by the visitors after which refreshments were served. The officers installed were as follows: N. G., Marion F. Crawford; V. G., Geo. E. Parker; Rec. Sec'y., Eben I. Kimball; Per. Sec'y., Chas. A. Sanger; Treas., Geo. F. Sanger; R. S. N. G., A. E. Southwick; L. S. N. G., Geo. A. Whitney; R.S.V.G., Horatio N. McCulley; L. S. V. G., Gustavus F. Williams; O. G., Daniel A. Goodridge; I. G., James Buxton; Con., Geo. A. Manning; R. S. S., Clarence M. Mason; L. S. S., Geo. Chandler; Chap., Jas. S. Paul. P. G. N. G. Patterson was elected to Grand Lodge.

The social dancing party at the Torrent hose house, last Friday evening, took the form of a night cap party, and a company sufficient to make five or six sets were present, and the affair was very successful. The ladies and gentlemen present were attired in night caps of various designs, and all were filled with merriment and good will. The Danvers orchestra furnished the music Frank A. Wilkinson was floor manager, his aids being Eben A. Hooper, George O. Morse, and Jesse F. Barrett. The next assembly will be a white apron party.

Francis J. Moran keeps an unlicensed place in the vicinity of "Hog hill." Last Wednesday he was enjoying the pastime of abusing his wife. James Hopkins of Danvers attempted to interfere and was assaulted by Moran, who kicked him so severely as to break his leg. He laid there till Thursday morning, when his wife hearing where he was took a team and conveyed him home. A physician was called and his leg set.

Frank C. Ferguson is certainly unlucky. Yesterday afternoon while working with a jig saw, he lost the index finger of his right hand and severely injured the next two. Mr. Boyle, a fellow workman, caught the belt which works the saw, and held it, while the pulley slipped around.

Rev. Mr. Tilson, of Boston, preached at the Baptist Church, last Sunday afternoon. It is expected that Dr. McKenzie, of Boston will preach next Sunday. While in town he will be the guest of Geo. J. Winchester, Esq.

Miss Alice Newton, the talented young reader, has joined the Spanish Students Combination and gone on a four months tour through the West.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

"Age is not alone the record,
Of the years we pass on earth,
But the work that we accomplish,
Making life of real worth;
Reader, by this standard measured,
What is thy condition now?
What the point of thy advancement
"Up the heights?" "How old art Thou?"

By the courtesy of Messrs. Pinder & Winchester, we recently examined the new "Chicken" Bark Mill in operation at their extensive establishment on Grove street. This mill is manufactured by Barrett & Bros., 43 Haverhill street, Boston, and is considered to be vastly superior to any former invention for either grinding or powdering bark. It is a small and compact machine, its horizontal cutter being driven the high speed of 1300 revolutions per minute by a set of shafting directly above it, while its cutting teeth are of steel, one quarter of an inch in length, arranged in a manner peculiar to the invention, which cuts the bark instead of tearing and pulverizing it. The estimated loss by "powdering" in the old machine is about 20 per cent., but in this machine the whole of that is saved. Above the cutter, and parallel to it, is a spiked feeding drum which slowly forces the bark upon the cutter as it revolves. A Self-regulating hopper is one of the principal features of the mill; it being so arranged as to adapt itself to the quantity of bark introduced, by a levee from which is suspended a heavy weight. When a large quantity of bark is in the hopper it will open like the jaws of a pair of pinchers instead of being clogged. After the bark is ground it falls and is caught up and raised by an elevator from whence it is conveyed to the leaches by an endless belt. The machine has been running for about six weeks and has ground a cord and a half per hour during working days, and it has not been sharpened since it was put in, nor does it yet show need of it. The old machines for grinding bark need to be sharpened about once a week on an average, so much time and labor is saved when the Chicken Mill is used. This machine and attachment were set up by Thomas E. Wilson.

John A. Enos has shown us plans of another invention which he is perfecting. It is a novel railroad for the safe and rapid transportation of U. S. Mail and light freight generally, to be used between large cities, etc. The invention consists of a wheel similar to that of a bycicle and suspended to an elevated track. His idea being of a post, say eight feet high, set at equal distances with a stringer from post to post with half inch rail on top of same. The car is to be directly underneath and connected to the wheel above with a common rod or pipe with two ordinary bearings. The size of the wheel in diameter can be very great. The machine is to be operated the same as a bycicle with treadles. A plain crank on end of treadle shaft connects the rod attached to the wheel above. Extraordinary rate of speed is claimed by the inventor.

The watch night service at the Methodist church last Sunday evening, was attended by upward of seventy-five people. The service opened at 9 o'clock with a praise meeting, lasting some twenty minutes. Dr. Steele then made a few remarks, saying that the first watch meeting was held 145 years ago, in the city of Bristol, and from that time to this that branch of Methodism has been preserved. So popular were the watch night services in those days that for a time they were held once a month. The remarks of Dr. Steele were followed by prayer and after that a discourse was delivered by Dr. Steele's son. Following his remarks was a love feast and silent prayer just before twelve, which was ended in the new year.

Hon. Mark Dennett, of Kittery, Maine, well known by his family connections in Newburyport, represented that town in the Massachusetts legislature, before Maine was set off from this State, in 1820. He is now in his ninety-seventh year. It is not known that any living man was a member of our legislature at so early a period. He was formerly a school master in his native town, having had as pupils, Messrs. Stephen and Luther Fernald of this town. Mr. Fernald has in his possession the autograph of Mr. Dennett, written in a clear legible hand, without the aid of glasses, in his 92d year. Mr. Dennett still works actively on his farm in Kittery.

There will be a meeting to-morrow evening of the firemen in relation to the Relief Association at G. A.R. Hall. Monday evening each company held a meeting to choose a trustee. Thus far the officers elected are, Pres., D.S. Littlefield; Vice Pres., W. J. Roome; Sec'y., John C. Buxton, Treas., D. B. Lord.

Afternoon dancing school at Upton's Hall, commencing Wednesday, Jan. 17, 1883. Henry O. Upton. dec 27—3t

A couple of young men giving the names of Frank Snow and Fred Eaton, of No. Andover, after visiting several liquor saloons last Sunday afternoon, brought up in a gravel pit above N. M. Quint's farm. They had a horse and buggy, and two others whose names are not known were with them. After driving around on the hills in the vicinity, the buggy was overturned and considerably damaged in the gravel plt. Word was sent to the police, and officers Peasley and Parker were soon on the ground but the offenders had disappeared. Later in the afternoon officer Pingree found the team on Washington street and the occupants sound asleep. They were brought to the station house and the team put up at Simonds' stable. One of the young men had a watch valued at thirty dollars stolen from him. Who the other two in the buggy with them were, they did not know, as their recollection of things in general was not very distinct.

Our Universalist friends are making extensive preparations for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of their church, and the event will take place in the afternoon and evening of next Wednesday, Jan. 10th. It is expected that several of the former pastors will be present, among them Rev. J. W. Talbot, O. F. Safford, A. B. Hervey, S. P. Smith and E. W. Whitney. The exercises will be held in their church, and in the afternoon, at two o'clock, will consist of a brief historical sketch by Amos Merrill, Esq., an address by Rev. Dr. Bolles of Salem, and reminiscences by former pastors. In the evening Rev. A. B. Hervey, of Taunton, will speak on "The Vital roots of Universalism," to be followed by Rev. O. F. Safford of Cambridgeport, on "The Outlook of the Universalist Church." Music will be furnished by the quartette of the church, and an interesting and profitable occasion will result.

The Danvers Mirror says further in relation to connecting the water pipes of Peabody and Danvers, "the trial on Friday of last week proved that the Danvers water service cannot be successfully supplied from Peabody, or certainly not through the four-inch pipe that connects the two systems. The Danvers works raise water 230 feet above the tide, giving an average of about 80 pounds pressure to the square inch, at the Plains; and the Peabody works give a height of 180 feet, but with this the pound pressure ran down at the Superintendent's office here to 15 pounds, and supplied no water at the Centre above the church. The factories using steam, all over town, that have not wells to draw from, were compelled to shut down. The leak however was soon repaired, the commencement being made at 10.30, and at 1.30 the pipes were being filled again."

About eighty members of Union Post 50 G. A. R. turned out last Monday evening to the installation of officers. Mustering officer, Commander Theodore Leutz, of Boston, acting as installing officer. He was assisted by officer of the Day Comrade Bullard, of Post 15 of Boston and Comrade Davis of Post 47, Haverhill. After the ceremony of installation there was speaking by the visiting comrades and a "tip top" clam chowder prepared by Comrade W. W. Reed was partaken of heartily. In place of the traditional pipe the "boys" enjoyed a cigar. The appointed officers not already published were: Adjutant, Cyrus T. Batchelder; Seargent Major, Geo. O. Peirce; Quartermaster Seargent, Wm. H. Hall.

Mr. Joseph Parker who resides at 123 Lowell St., while working at L. & G. H. Poor's currying shop, got his right arm caught in a splitting machine fracturing the bone and lacerating the flesh both below and above the elbow in a fearful manner. Dr. Pike was called and carried him home. Upon examination he called Dr. Osborne and subsequently they called for Dr. Kimball of Salem. It was decided that the only possible chance for saving Mr. Parker's life, was to remove the arm. Dr. Kimball therefore amputated it at the upper third near the shoulder joint. Mr. Parker rallied well from the operation and is at the present time comfortable.

Tuesday, Jan. 6th, has been selected as the day in the week of prayer, by the National W. C. T. Union, to be devoted to the cause of Temperance progress. The Peabody Union will observe this day in their room, commencing at 9 o'clock, and invite as many to join them as possible. Mrs. M. O. Stevens will lead the meeting at 9 o'clock, Miss Floyd at 10 o'clock, Mrs. Cutler at 11 o'clock, Mrs. D. Huntington at 2 o'clock At 3 o'clock Mrs. Dr. Steele will give a talk upon "Gideon and his band." It is hoped a Union meeting will be held in the evening. A lunch will be provided for all who desire to remain during the intermission.

Evening dancing school at Upton's Hall, commencing Thursday, Jan. 25th. Henry O. Upton. dec 27—3t

Splendid line of Christmas Cards, all prices, at George Stevens'.

North Peabody.—Rev. Dr. Steele will preach at the Chapel next Thursday at 7 1-2 o'clock, P. M.

James Pike of the well known firm of Pike & Whipple, has just completed quite an extensive henery.

Mr. Peabody of South Peabody has removed into the house of Amos F. Buxton on Andover St.

We regret to learn of the continued illness of T. J. Osborn.

Some of our citizens are contemplating removing to the west soon.

Michael Connors has purchased the estate of Charles Endicott of Salem, situated on Mt. Pleasant.

D. W. Putnam of Prospect St., was quite severely kicked by a horse in Salem one day last week.

Henry Steniford's family have returned from a Christmas visit to Lowell.

Mr. J. B. Wilson is spending the holidays at home.

Elijah Wilson, of Andover street, had his horse and carriage stolen last Sunday evening from Central street, Salem, at about 7 o'clock; the police recovered it on Mt. Vernon street at about 4 o'clock Monday morning, minus a wolf's skin robe and whip; the horse and carriage in a demoralized condition. No clue to the perpetrators of the outrage.

Messrs. Pike & Whipple have shipped another invoice of wagons to Australia.

Big Elm, No. 1, situated on Andover street at the Osborn Farm, was cut down last Wednesday by J. G. Walcott, it being considered unsafe to stand longer. Its dimensions were 103 feet in height, where it was cut down diameter 10 feet, amount of wood variously estimated at from 10 to 20 cords. A limb blown off in '69 by the September gale made 7 cords of wood. It was estimated to be about 300 years old, so another land mark is gone and will soon be a thing of the past. z.

So. Peabody Notes.—Miss Eliza J. Carlton is lying very low, her recovery being very doubtful.

Chester Twiss, son of J. W. Twiss, met with a very singular accident while skating last Saturday. He was skating along with his hands in his pocket when another boy pushed him and he fell and cut a gash under his chin one and one half inches in length. At last accounts he was getting along very well.

Jennie Carpenter, daughter of Rev. C. C. Carpenter of Mt. Vernon, N. H., formerly of South Peabody, met with a severe accident on Christmas day. While coasting with her brothers, the double runner was overturned, and her leg broken. It was set as well as it could be—the little girl said—"by anybody in the world, except Dr. Pike."

The marriage of Grace G. Marshall to Clark Chase, book-keeper for John Shaw 2d & Brothers, takes place Thursday Jan. 4th. The happy couple will reside in Lynn in the house recently completed for them near Gold fish pond.

The ice men have been busily engaged the past week in harvesting the ice crop. It is about 10 1-2 inches thick and is as good as ever was gathered. Mr. Batchelder has his all in. Mr. Newhall will finish to-day. Mr. Batchelder will also put in J. B. Thomas' ice at Craig's pond commencing to-day.

Mary Marsh was struck with a paralytic shock last Sunday.

Geo. Twiss, Jr. has so far recovered as to be able to go out to ride last Monday.

W. Woodman, while carrying the grab at J. B. Newhall's ice house, met with a serious accident. The grab fell from the top of the run making an ugly wound on the side of his face.

About $75 was made by the recent fair in aid of the building fund.

The residence of Lawrence Purtell, on Mt. Vernon St., foreman of Richardson Doyle & Co's. leather manufactory, was entered by burglars last Thursday night, and the sum of $73 was stolen. Entrance was effected by turning the lock in the front door. They then visited the sleeping chamber guided by a light left dimly burning and took a vest left hanging on a bed post. In the inside pocket of the vest was a wallet containing one hundred and twenty-three dollars. The thieves took the money from the wallet, leaving a watch and chain that was in the vest pocket, with the vest on the stairs. Some fifty dollars of the brown back money was found in the entry. It is supposed the thieves were not familiar with it and so threw it away. On leaving the house their movements awakened Mr. Purtell, who soon discovered his loss. The police were notified, but up to present writing have been unable to find a clue to the burglary.

Robert Dalrymple, an Eastern Railroad baggage master, was presented with a valuable seal ring, on Saturday, by a number of personal friends on board the train.

NEWSPAPERS AND TELEGRAPHS.—Thirty-five years ago the New York Associated Press was organized. It was composed of seven principal morning journals, and its business was to collect the news of the world by telegraph to resell to the other papers throughout the country. This press monopoly made an alliance with the telegraph monopoly; but meanwhile the press of the West has been steadily increasing in wealth and power, and has organized a press service of its own. It now secures its European news, as well as general news of this country and the world through its own agents. It has broken loose from the New York city press monopoly has checked the the growth of newspapers in the Eastern States, and has injured the protected papers, for without the stimulus of competition newspaper enterprise is apt to lag. We have too many bad journals, and too few good ones. A newspaper should be the history of the world for one day, and the time is coming when our journals will be larger, better and abler. People are reading books less and newspapers more. Some day the morning papers will have illustrated supplements giving pictures of current events which will be printed in colors.—Demorest's Monthly.

The leading articles of THE MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY for December, (A. S. Barnes & Co.) are devoted to the Pilgrim Fathers, thus forming substantially a New England Number, and one not only of special interest to the New England Societies, on the recurrence of the anniversary of the Landing of the Pilgrims, but to the country at large. Prof. Adams of the John Hopkins University, writes very pleasantly of "Plymouth Rock Restored." Dr. DeCosta has an article on "Plymouth before the Pilgrims." Mr. R. K. Sewall, of the Maine Historical Society, gives a sketch of the chief "Samoset in his Relation to New England History." Prof. Newcomb gives an admirable review of "Sumner's Life of Andrew Jackson;" Mr. Johnston has a sketch of "The Evacuation of Charleston, S. C., 1783." There is also a valuable reprint of "The Voyage of Martin Pring," and documents showing why the Pilgrims come over and what they believed; with original documents on William Penn. A steel portrait of Captain John Smith forms the frontispiece. The portrait of Miles Standish, a View of Plymouth Rock are also given. This number is every way fresh, unique, important and timely, while the Magazine deserves the support of all the cultivated classes of society.

JAMES VICK.—From the appearance of VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE, which is on our desk, we should judge that the young VICK'S was "chips of the old block," as the Floral Guide with its lithographed cover is handsome enough for the parlor table. It is printed on the best of paper, has three colored plates of Flowers and vegetables, and full of useful information. Those who send 10 cents for it cannot be disappointed, as the plates alone are worth the amount. Address, as in past years, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

What is needed is pure blood, as the influence of its purity upon the health cannot be overestimated. When it becomes impure, it gives rise to a large number of diseases, such as biliousness, sick headache, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, low spirits, nervousness, female complaints, etc. The success which has attended the use of Swedish Botanic Compound warrants us to say that for purifying and enriching the blood, creating an appetite, strengthening and renovating the whole system, nothing surpasses that great remedy.

In a senatorial district of Essex county, says the Newburyport Herald, the senator-elect is a man who has been quite successful in business, but is not a politician, nor has he ever before been elected to any public office. When it was announced that Congress was about to meet, the senator elect went to the railway station and inquired the price of a ticket to Washington. "Ah? Mr. X," said the station master, "are you going on a visit to Washington?" "Certainly," said X, "I have been elected senator, and I must go." The station agent explained that the destination was Boston, and the time January, and that the railroad companies furnished free tickets to members of the legislature, and X went away much relieved. Was this the Senator from our district?

A fact probably but little known is that the United States nickel five-cent piece furnishes a key to metric measures and weights. This coin is two centimetres in diameter and its weight is five grammes. Five of them placed in a row will give the length of a decimetre, and two of them will weigh a dekagramme. As a kilolitre is a cubic metre, the key of the measure is also the key to a measure of capacity.

Miscellaneous.

MISTAKES IN WRITING HISTORY.

We have an unfortunate habit of distributing historical affairs under reigns. Even where monarchy is extremely powerful, it is seldom that an age ought to be called after a monarch. It would be better not to speak even of the "Siecle de Louis XIV." The English monarchs of the eighteenth century were by no means the faineants they are sometimes made to appear; still it is absurd to represent them as determining the character of their age. The first step in arranging and dividing any period of English history is to get rid of such useless headings as reign of Queen Anne, reign of George I., reign of George II. In the place of these we must study to put divisions founded upon some real stage of progress in the national life. We must look onward not from King to King, but from great event to great event. And in order to do this we must estimate events, measure their greatness, a thing which cannot be done without considering and analyzing them closely. When with respect to any event we have satisfied ourselves that it deserves to rank among the leading events of the national history, the next step is to put it in connection with its causes. In this way each event takes the character of a development, and each development of this kind forms a chapter in the national history, a chapter which will get its name from the event. As a plain example of this principle, take the reign of George III. What can be more absurd than to treat those sixty years as constituting one period, simply because one man was King during the whole of them? What, then, are we to substitute for the King as a principle of division? Evidently great events. One part of the reign will make a chapter by itself as the period of the loss of America, another as that of the struggle with the French Revolution. But in a national history there are larger as well as smaller divisions. Besides chapters, there are, as it were, books or parts. This is because the great events, when examined closely, are seen to be connected with each other; those which are chronologically nearest to each other are seen to be similar; they fall into groups, each of which may be regarded as a single complex event, and the complex events give their names to the parts, as the simpler events give their names to the separate chapters, of the history.—Prof. Seeley, in Macmillan's Magazine.

A GENTLEMANLY MECHANIC.

A horse car was proceeding up Shawmut avenue on Saturday afternoon, and among its freight of precious human lives, it bore six young men, all irreproachably dressed, and, to their own minds, at least, of engaging personal appearance. Bunched up in a corner, also, was a man whose linen and complexion gave color to the opinion that he was engaged in the plastering trade, and whose features indicated that he was of Hibernian extraction. The car was crowded and bumped along slowly, and presently there entered a young woman of considerable charm of features, and looked about for a seat. Instantly the plasterer and the six elaborately adorned young men got up and in one breath tendered her the choice of seven separate and distinct seats. She accepted that which was offered by one of the gilded youths, whereupon the plasterer and the five remaining young men sat down again. Presently a colored woman with a big bundle came in and hung on to a strap, while the young men remained in their respective positions, as if cemented thereto. Thereupon the plasterer, after looking up and down to see that nobody else arose, got up and said:

"Plaze to take this sate, mum. I offered it to the young leddy over yander whin she got in, but she tuk one that one o' thim byes alongside give to her. So you take this, for begorra! if I should kape it from yez afther offerin' it to the other leddy the folks aboord the car moight think I was a masher, an' I've got a charackter to sustain."

And thus speaking, he took his old clothes and a kit of tools that he fished up from under the seat to the front platform, and all the youths looked out at him and gazed at one another, and knew not what to say, and there was silence in that car for the space of a block and a half.—Boston Journal.

JESTING IN THE PRESENCE OF DEATH.

The two lines:

"A thoughtless jester even in his death,
Uttering his jibes beyond his latest breath."

were literally fulfilled the other day. An Irishman, who exercised the profession of "Ethiopian serenader," was being attended in his last moments by his priest. He seems to have been a very good sort of fellow, and was paying due attention to his spiritual adviser when suddenly a change came over his face. "I say, old boy," he exclaimed, mechanically assuming his stage voice, "I must just ask you this one question—"What's the difference between—" "My good man, your're dying," interposed the priest; "never mind that now." "Can't help that," rejoined the other; "it's such a capital riddle and just out. What's the difference—" And with that he dropped his head, and without another word to give a clue to what the enigma was that exercised an influence so so strong in death, went to find the answer to the great enigma of the universe.—Notes and Queries.

Few persons have sufficient wisdom to prefer censure, which is useful to them, to praise, which deceives them.

A STARTLING STATEMENT!

Corroborated by the Chief of Police.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1881.

DR. CHARLES CRAIG:—Dear Sir: Suffering as I have been for a long time with a fearful cold, that finally settled into what is termed quick consumption, and so pronounced by the attending physician, I heard of your Consumption Cure, and while having little faith in anything benefitting me, procured some of it, used it, and to day am, to the wonder of myself and friends, a well man.—I write this, as I feel in duty bound to do, for the benefit of suffering humanity, and can but hope that the thousands who are now suffering with that supposed incurable disease Consumption will try your Consumption Remedy. They will receive speedy relief and a permanent cure. You can send any one to me who cares to be advised as to the manner in which your medicines cured me.

P. H. SULLIVAN, Captain Police.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 14, 1882.

We, the undersigned, are personally acquainted with Captain P. H. Sullivan. We knew of his debilitated condition at one time, are knowing to the fact that he is now daily on duty, and are satisfied he would not make any statement that was not strictly true.

COMPOUND PEPSIN TONIC

Compound essence of pepsin. A remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion as shown in loss of appetite, nausea, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, water-brash, and a sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach. Dose, one tablespoonful (for adults) before meals.

Dyspepsia or indigestion is very prevalent in this country owing to habits of living—especially of eating and drinking. There is a disagreeable sensation in the stomach, although there may be no pain. When there is pain it is located in the breast, giving rise to fears of lung disease. There is a slight nausea; the mouth is clammy, or has a sour, bitter taste; the complexion is sallow, the bowels are costive, and there may be heartburn, water-brash, flatulence, palpitation of the heart (causing fear of heart disease), headache or double sight. The disease may be caused by either too much or too little exercise, too severe application of the mind, excessive emotion, intemperance in alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea or coffee, too warm and too rich food, ice water, excessive use of medicine, etc. For sale by

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS

are certainly best, having been so decreed at every Great World's Industrial Competition for Sixteen Years; no other American organs having been found equal at any. Also cheapest. Style 169; 3 1-4 octaves; sufficient compass and power, with best quality, for popular, sacred and secular music in schools or families, at only $22. One hundred other styles at $30, $57, $66, $72, $78, $93, $108, $114 to $500 and up. The larger styles are wholly unrivaled by any other organs. Also for easy payments. New Illustrated Catalogue free.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching: in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisons, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,

FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired. Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

NEWSPAPERS AND TELEGRAPHS.—Thirty-five years ago the New York Associated Press was organized. It was composed of seven principal morning journals, and its business was to collect the news of the world by telegraph to resell to the other papers throughout the country. This press monopoly made an alliance with the telegraph monopoly; but meanwhile the press of the West has been steadily increasing in wealth and power, and has organized a press service of its own. It now secures its European news, as well as general news of this country and the world through its own agents. It has broken loose from the New York city press monopoly has checked the the growth of newspapers in the Eastern States, and has injured the protected papers, for without the stimulus of competition newspaper enterprise is apt to lag. We have too many bad journals, and too few good ones. A newspaper should be the history of the world for one day, and the time is coming when our journals will be larger, better and abler. People are reading books less and newspapers more. Some day the morning papers will have illustrated supplements giving pictures of current events which will be printed in colors.—Demorest's Monthly.

The leading articles of THE MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY for December, (A. S. Barnes & Co.] are devoted to the Pilgrim Fathers, thus forming substantially a New England Number, and one not only of special interest to the New England Societies, on the recurrence of the anniversary of the Landing of the Pilgrims, but to the country at large. Prof. Adams of the John Hopkins University, writes very pleasantly of "Plymouth Rock Restored." Dr. DeCosta has an article on "Plymouth before the Pilgrims." Mr. R. K. Sewall, of the Maine Historical Society, gives a sketch of the chief "Samoset in his Relation to New England History." Prof. Newcomb gives an admirable review of "Sumner's Life of Andrew Jackson;" Mr. Johnston has a sketch of "The Evacuation of Charleston, S. C., 1783." There is also a valuable reprint of "The Voyage of Martin Pring," and documents showing why the Pilgrims come over and what they believed; with original documents on William Penn. A steel portrait of Captain John Smith forms the frontispiece. The portrait of Miles Standish, a View of Plymouth Rock are also given. This number is every way fresh, unique, important and timely, while the Magazine deserves the support of all the cultivated classes of society.

JAMES VICK.—From the appearance of VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE, which is on our desk, we should judge that the young VICK'S was "chips of the old block," as the Floral Guide with its lithographed cover is handsome enough for the parlor table. It is printed on the best of paper, has three colored plates of Flowers and vegetables, and full of useful information. Those who send 10 cents for it cannot be disappointed, as the plates alone are worth the amount. Address, as in past years, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

What is needed is pure blood, as the influence of its purity upon the health cannot be overestimated. When it becomes impure, it gives rise to a large number of diseases, such as biliousness, sick headache, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, low spirits, nervousness, female complaints, etc. The success which has attended the use of Swedish Botanic Compound warrants us to say that for purifying and enriching the blood, creating an appetite, strengthening and renovating the whole system, nothing surpasses that great remedy.

In a senatorial district of Essex county, says the Newburyport Herald, the senator-elect is a man who has been quite successful in business, but is not a politician, nor has he ever before been elected to any public office. When it was announced that Congress was about to meet, the senator elect went to the railway station and inquired the price of a ticket to Washington. "Ah? Mr. X," said the station master, "are you going on a visit to Washington?" "Certainly," said X, "I have been elected senator, and I must go." The station agent explained that the destination was Boston, and the time January, and that the railroad companies furnished free tickets to members of the legislature, and X went away much relieved. Was this the Senator from our district?

Call early.

A fact probably but little known is that the United States nickel five-cent piece furnishes a key to metric measures and weights. This coin is two centimetres in diameter and its weight is five grammes. Five of them placed in a row will give the length of a decimetre, and two of them will weigh a dekagramme. As a kilolitre is a cubic metre, the key of the measure is also the key to a measure of capacity.

Miscellaneous.

MISTAKES IN WRITING HISTORY.

We have an unfortunate habit of distributing historical affairs under reigns. Even where monarchy is extremely powerful, it is seldom that an age ought to be called after a monarch. It would be better not to speak even of the "Siecle de Louis XIV." The English monarchs of the eighteenth century were by no means the faineants they are sometimes made to appear; still it is absurd to represent them as determining the character of their age. The first step in arranging and dividing any period of English history is to get rid of such useless headings as reign of Queen Anne, reign of George I., reign of George II. In the place of these we must study to put divisions founded upon some real stage of progress in the national life. We must look onward not from King to King, but from great event to great event. And in order to do this we must estimate events, measure their greatness, a thing which cannot be done without considering and analyzing them closely. When with respect to any event we have satisfied ourselves that it deserves to rank among the leading events of the national history, the next step is to put it in connection with its causes. In this way each event takes the character of a development, and each development of this kind forms a chapter in the national history, a chapter which will get its name from the event. As a plain example of this principle, take the reign of George III. What can be more absurd than to treat those sixty years as constituting one period, simply because one man was King during the whole of them? What, then, are we to substitute for the King as a principle of division? Evidently great events. One part of the reign will make a chapter by itself as the period of the loss of America, another as that of the struggle with the French Revolution. But in a national history there are larger as well as smaller divisions. Besides chapters, there are, as it were, books or parts. This is because the great events, when examined closely, are seen to be connected with each other; those which are chronologically nearest to each other are seen to be similar; they fall into groups, each of which may be regarded as a single complex event, and the complex events give their names to the parts, as the simpler events give their names to the separate chapters, of the history.—Prof. Seeley, in Macmillan's Magazine.

A GENTLEMANLY MECHANIC.

A horse car was proceeding up Shawmut avenue on Saturday afternoon, and among its freight of precious human lives, it bore six young men, all irreproachably dressed, and, to their own minds, at least, of engaging personal appearance. Bunched up in a corner, also, was a man whose linen and complexion gave color to the opinion that he was engaged in the plastering trade, and whose features indicated that he was of Hibernian extraction. The car was crowded and bumped along slowly, and presently there entered a young woman of considerable charm of features, and looked about for a seat. Instantly the plasterer and the six elaborately adorned young men got up and in one breath tendered her the choice of seven separate and distinct seats. She accepted that which was offered by one of the gilded youths, whereupon the plasterer and the five remaining young men sat down again. Presently a colored woman with a big bundle came in and hung on to a strap, while the young men remained in their respective positions, as if cemented thereto. Thereupon the plasterer, after looking up and down to see that nobody else arose, got up and said:

"Plaze to take this sate, mum. I offered it to the young leddy over yander whin she got in, but she tuk one that one o' thim byes alongside give to her. So you take this, for begorra! if I should kape it from yez afther offerin' it to the other leddy the folks aboord the car moight think I was a masher, an' I've got a charackter to sustain."

And thus speaking, he took his old clothes and a kit of tools that he fished up from under the seat to the front platform, and all the youths looked out at him and gazed at one another, and knew not what to say, and there was silence in that car for the space of a block and a half.—Boston Journal.

JESTING IN THE PRESENCE OF DEATH.

The two lines:

"A thoughtless jester even in his death,
Uttering his jibes beyond his latest breath,"

were literally fulfilled the other day. An Irishman, who exercised the profession of "Ethiopian serenader," was being attended in his last moments by his priest. He seems to have been a very good sort of fellow, and was paying due attention to his spiritual adviser when suddenly a change came over his face. "I say, old boy," he exclaimed, mechanically assuming his stage voice, "I must just ask you this one question—"What's the difference between—" "My good man, your're dying," interposed the priest; "never mind that now." "Can't help that," rejoined the other; "it's such a capital riddle and just out. What's the difference—" And with that he dropped his head, and without another word to give a clue to what the enigma was that exercised an influence so so strong in death, went to find the answer to the great enigma of the universe.—Notes and Queries.

Few persons have sufficient wisdom to prefer censure, which is useful to them, to praise, which deceives them.

A STARTLING STATEMENT!
Corroborated by the Chief of Police.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1881.
DR. CHARLES CRAIG:—Dear Sir: Suffering as I have been for a long time with a fearful cold, that finally settled into what is termed quick consumption, and so pronounced by the attending physician, I heard of your Consumption Cure, and while having little faith in anything benefitting me, procured some of it, used it, and to day am, to the wonder of myself and friends, a well man.—I write this, as I feel in duty bound to do, for the benefit of suffering humanity, and can but hope that the thousands who are now suffering with that supposed incurable disease Consumption will try your Consumption Remedy. They will receive speedy relief and a permanent cure. You can send any one to me who cares to be advised as to the manner in which your medicines cured me.
P. H. SULLIVAN, Captain Police.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 14, 1882.
We, the undersigned, are personally acquainted with Captain P. H. Sullivan. We knew of his debilitated condition at one time, are knowing to the fact that he is now daily on duty, and are satisfied he would not make any statement that was not strictly true.

COMPOUND PEPSIN TONIC
Compound essence of pepsin. A remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion as shown in loss of appetite, nausea, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, water-brash, and a sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach. Dose, one tablespoonful (for adults) before meals.
Dyspepsia or indigestion is very prevalent in this country owing to habits of living—especially of eating and drinking. There is a disagreeable sensation in the stomach, although there may be no pain. When there is pain it is located in the breast, giving rise to fears of lung disease. There is a slight nausea; the mouth is clammy, or has a sour, bitter taste; the complexion is sallow, the bowels are costive, and there may be heartburn, water-brash, flatulence, palpitation of the heart (causing fear of heart disease), headache or double sight. The disease may be caused by either too much or too little exercise, too severe application of the mind, excessive emotion, intemperance in alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea or coffee, too warm and too rich food, ice water, excessive use of medicine, etc. For sale by

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is
HEYLINGBERG'S
EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.
It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.
Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.
Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,

AN ENGLISHMAN AND HIS "DAWG."

The following amusing incident, according to the Bayreuth correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal, occurred on the train after leaving Calais: A plump English lady, past fifty, with wild eyes and a long, smooth-shaven upper lip, was struggling with the rear parts of a white Porto Rico lap-dog, while opposite, on the same seat, a burly Englishman was pleading with the same animal, which had its teeth set with much firmness in the tender portion of the Englishman's nose. It was a young-lady dog; its ringlets had been so sheared as to give it the appearance of a fierce Numidian lion; it was exceedingly nervous, and the British gentleman had "nagged" the creature—"Derby," pronounced Darby, it was called—until it had retorted by grabbing the pursy gent's nose as though it had been a rat.

"God bless me soul, Darby! D'ye know y'ave me nose quite set between yer pretty little teeth, Darby? [A quiet tweak by Darby.] Darby, dear! I say, Darby! Darby, there's a darling! God bless me, but it's a brave girl! [Another emphatic tweak.] Precious child; there, now! mind ye, Darby, dear, I've no notion of tearing away from ye, Darby. God bless me, Darby, I 'avn't such a thought! Oh, no, pretty creature! But God bless me, wife, cawn't ye, some'ow, ye know, entice the beast away? I've been very cool—ah, Darby, there's a dear! but, 'pon me word, I'm fast exhausting. Wife! woman! show Darby the creams! 'Eaven 'elp me, but this is a go, though! 'Ave a cream, Darby; do! There's a dear, though. Gód bless me, but the creams did it, though."

They really had done it. Derby had been shown some French creams, of which she was very fond, and evidently preferred them to the Englishman's nose. The pursy gent seemed fit for an apopletic stroke on account of his nose, which had suffered no more than a good pinch; but the English lady's moanings at the possibility of Derby's nervous system receiving too severe a shock were something piteous indeed. The child of these two English people was with a maid in a compartment of a second-class carriage in another portion of the train.

DISOBEYING ORDERS.

The following story, says the Galveston News is told of General Harney when he was in command at Camp Verde, Texas. He was an intensely dignified officer, and if there was one thing he detested more than another it was undignified haste. One evening, just as he was about to hold dress parade, he perceived that he had forgotten his handkerchief, and as the weather was very hot, he said to his orderly: "Go to my quarters, quick, and bring me my handkerchief." The orderly touched his cap and started for the quarters, several hundred yards distant. After he had proceeded a short distance, remembering that there was no time to lose, he broke into a trot. "See that scoundrel running as if the Indians were after him. If there is anything I hate it is to see a soldier running instead of marching properly. Here, my man," continued Harney to another soldier, "go after that man and tell him I say to walk." The second soldier started after the first, but as the first one kept on running, the second one saw his only chance to deliver the message was to hurry up, so he, too, broke into a run. To say that Harney swore, is to use but a mild expression. "Here, sergeant, go after that man and tell him if he don't stop running I'll hang him up by the thumbs." The sergeant started out in a brisk walk, but as his predecessor had a good start, he, too, began to run as hard as he could. "If all three of the scoundrels ain't running like Jack rabbits." ejaculated Harney. "I'll show 'em." And tucking his sword under his arm he started in pursuit as fast as he could run; but suddenly remembering his dignity, he came to a halt and walked stiffly and slowly back to the place where the dress parade was to come off.

A BRAVE YOUNG WOMAN.

A correspondent of the Boston Herald, writing from Boothbay Harbor Island, Me., relates the following incident concerning Matinicus Light: "During the terrible storm, memorable as that which carried away Minot's Ledge Light, the Matinicus keeper and his wife were away, and were unable to return, and for sixteen days and nights his daughter, a girl of sixteen, was there alone in the terrific storm, taking sole care of the lights, while the huge waves swept over the island. Her allowance of food was limited to a cup of meal each day and several hens, which she had rescued from the hen house just before a huge breaker had swept it into the sea. For her faithful courage she was appointed assistant keeper, and remained with her father for years, till she was promoted to a light of a higher order. She is now the wife of the keeper of White Light, and is appointed first assistant and her son second. White Light is always saluted by the Mount Desert steamers, and the lady sometims stands in the doorway waving her domestic apron."

The best rules to form a young man are to talk little, to hear much, to reflect alone upon what has passed in company, to distrust one's own opinions and value others that deserve it.

There are few people more often in the wrong than those who cannot endure to be so.

Love comes when we expect it the least and dread it the most.

The NEW YORK, 1883. Sun.

More people have read THE SUN during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read and like THE SUN for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at pr sent revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs THE SUN makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whale as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The SUN has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the SUN is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robesonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the SUN stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the SUN is the best religious newspaper ever published, because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor.—A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the SUN discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the SUN, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before.—If you do not already know the SUN, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of commonsense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummingt, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I rebeived decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it

J. E. Brnorton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March-1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a news paper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

Dramatic and Musical.

John McCullough is to appear in Virginius at the Boston Theatre on the 15th, beginning a brief engagement. Mr. J. S. Haworth is to play Icilius and other important roles. This will be welcome news to the many admirers of this sterling actor, and we shall be disappointed if crowded houses are not the rule. Meantime, the final performances of the "World" are the attraction. And while the company which produced it at Salem was first class, the effect of the elegant scenery added to the superb acting of Mr. Redmund and Mrs. Barry at the home theatre give it a charm which is beyond description. It should be seen by all our readers.

At the Park Theatre, this is the closing week of "Hazel Kirke" There is no need of expatiating upon the good qualities of this domestic drama. Nor is it necessary to speak at length of the general excellence of the acting, which is so smooth and even that the audiences go away delighted with the entertainment. Next week those favorite actors, Mr. and Mrs. McKee Rankin, appear for a brief sojourn. They will open their engagement in "Forty-nine," Leonard Grover's drama, in which Mrs. Rankin appears to such fine advantage. The play will be finely mounted, and produced with a fine cast.

The last engagement which that greatest of tragedians, Signor Salvini, is likely ever to play before a Boston audience begins at the Globe Theatre this week. As previously he will have the support of Miss Marie Prescott and Lewis Morrison. On Friday night the artist will be seen in that marvellous portrayal of Conrad in "The Outlaw," the most perfectly balanced personation in Salvini's series of performances, while at the Saturday matinee "Othello" will be given. On the nights when Salvini does not appear, Thursday and Saturday evenings, the interesting drama "The New Magdalen," is announced. The role of Mercy Merrick is to be taken by Miss Marie Prescott, and Lewis Morrison will appear as Julian Gray. Miss Prescott has been very successful in the character.

At the Bijou, the same opera "Iolanthe," with standing room only at every performance, is likely to be the announcement, and the only one, for weeks to come, and we advise our readers that it is necessary to secure seats in advance, in order to obtain anything desirable.

Kate Claxton and "The Two Orphans" is one of the coming attractions at the Globe.

"Courage!" is now well under way towards its production at the Park. Two well-known New York firms are manufacturing the immense quantity of flowers used in the fete scene. The incidental music was rehearsed last week in New York before a small but select audience at the Bijou Opera House and was pronounced superb, the negro flower march in act 2, being several times encored. Probably no more elaborate preparations to make a complete and correct representation of a new drama have been made in Boston for years.

"Elsie" is the name of a new drama written by Fred Marsden for the Madison Square people. It is said that a strong representation will be the result. Miss Carrie Turner, now performing at the Park Theatre, will have the role of the heroine.

It is said that English managers are negotiating with Mr. William Redmund, the popular leading actor of the Boston Theatre, for his appearance at several of the principal theatres of Great Britain, in "Ruy Blas" and several other roles, during the coming summer. He will, however, return to the Boston for the regular season of 1883-4.

Messrs. Moulton & Johnson will introduce on Monday, January 8, for the first time, the great New York favorite from Wallack's Theatre, Miss Ada Dyas, supported by a fine Company, in Mr. Taylor's famous comedy "An Unequal Match."

Mr. John S. Moulton, the senior partner of Moulton & Johnson, was in Salem last week. He is travelling hrough New York State with his Comic Opera Company, which are playing to large houses. They appear in the "Mascot," Olivette and Pinafore.

To-morrow evening in Mechanic Hall come the Vokes family in "Fun in a Fog." This family have no superiors in their line of mirth. They are not only good actors, but first class singers, and the piece in which they are to appear is a new one—never before heard in this vicinity. They will also present a farce "Naval Engagements." For an evening crowded full of enjoyment—a relief from the blues, if our readers ever have them,—go and see the Vokes.' Seats are now on sale at Ropes' drug store.

Mr. John A. Messer, of this town, well known from his connection with the Salem Cadet Band, has a lucrative situation in the orchestra of the new Bijou theatre, of which John J. Braham is leader. John is a good performer and has hosts of friends.

Charles Atkinson's Comic Opera, "Jollities," was presented at Peabody Institute last Monday evening, under the management of Morrison & Hill. It was a good show and was well rendered, while the singing by all the members of the company was indeed excellent. There was, however, but a small attendance, and though the play was funny, it took some time to wake the audience up. It seems too bad that such a small audience should greet a good play when we have one so seldom.

Miss Ada Dyas and her excellent comedy company opened at the above theatre last evening before a most excellent and brilliant audience, comprised of the elite of Harlem, as Hester Grazebrook in "An Unequal Match." Judging from the enthusiasm displayed she made a decided hit, and fully sustained her reputation as an actress of the highest ability. Her entire company are people well known, and all do justice to the characters allotted them. It was, indeed, a brilliant opening of a week of standard comedy.—N. Y. Dramatic News.

Miss Dyas appears in Salem, Monday, Jan. 8th, under Moulton & Johnson.

Henry E. Abbey has been given the management of the big new opera-house at New York, and will open it in October. Nilsson, M'lle Valleria, Campanini and De Puente are already engaged, and Mr. Abbey says he is negotiating for other famous singers, and will have a chorus of 100.

"The Gifted Commissioner."—Our gifted commissioner of agriculture does not find in Washington that ready appreciation of his talents that he found at the New England cattle shows. The president did not take kindly to Dr. Loring's modest effort to hoist his office up to the level of a cabinet position, and yesterday Congressman Cox tried to prevent him from weaving tariff and other foreign questions into his report, while Congressman Murch insisted that the commissioner should write his documents in plain English. The efforts to choke off the doctor as a statesman and an orator, and make him only a distributor of garden seeds, cannot fail to attract the attention of the country.—New York Sun.

An item is going the rounds which tells of how a New York man did a favor for a man about twenty years ago, and the other day the New York man received a check for $150,000. Parties who have received favors at our hands will please remind us at once. Please make the amount in two or three separate checks, and send on at different intervals, so the shock won't be too great. One hundred and fifty thousand dollar favors are not to be granted every day in the week.

The Press devil will receive sealed proposals during the next five days to contract for the cleaning of this year's office towel. Bids will only be entertained from responsible parties, and the successful contractor must give bonds to complete the job in 30 days.

Pressure of advertising compels the Peabody Press to add two pages to its usual issue. Its publishers have an intelligent appreciation of the wants of their patrons and are enabled to make the Press one of the most attractive local weeklies in the country.—Lynn Union.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

To the heirs of JOHN RAY, and all other parties interested:

By virtue of a mortgage deed given by JOHN RAY to JAMES McGLINCHY, dated October 17th, A. D. 1877, and recorded with Essex, Southern District, Deeds, Book 985, Leaf 271, and assigned by WILLIAM I. PUTNAM, administrator of the estate of said McGlinchy, to JOHN A. PUTNAM, by deed dated July 24th, A.D. 1882, and assigned by said John A. Putnam to WILLIAM H. GOVE, by deed dated August 1st, A. D. 1882, and assigned by said William H. Gove to MARTHA S. PUTNAM, by deed dated August 1st, A. D. 1882, and for breach of conditions in said mortgage deed contained, will be sold at public auction, on the first lot hereinafter described, on Thursday, Jan. 18, A. D. 1883, at three o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular, the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, viz.: First,—a parcel of pasture land situate in Peabody, in the county of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, near Felton's Corner, and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the corner on the lane by land now or formerly of the heirs of the late Malachi Wilson; thence easterly, by said heirs' land, forty rods and five inches to land now or late of Stephen N. Proctor; thence southerly by said Proctor's land eighteen rods and seventeen links, to land now or late of Moses Preston; thence westerly by said Preston's land twenty-one rods and twelve links to the lane; thence northerly by said lane twenty-eight rods and sixteen links to the first named bound Containing about three acres and one hundred and twenty-three poles.

Second,—Another parcel of land in said Peabody, bounded beginning at a point on Prospect street, one hundred and twenty feet distant southwesterly as the wall stands from the burying ground; thence running by said street and wall northeasterly to the burying ground; thence northwesterly by the walls as they stand by said burying-ground, by land now or formerly of Felton and land now or formerly of Elijah Wilson, six hundred and forty-two feet and eleven inches to land now or formerly of heirs of M. Wilson; thence southwesterly by land of said heirs one hundred and forty-one feet by the wall as it now stands; thence south of easterly in a direct line by land formerly of Richard S. Rogers, five hundred and eighty-two feet and two inches, to the point begun at. Containing about one acre three roods and thirty-eight and one-half rods.

Said estate will be sold, subject to the mortgage of John Ray to Richard S. Rogers, recorded with said Essex Deeds, Book 597, Leaf 131; John Ray to Aaron Eveleth, recorded with said deeds, Book 837, Leaf 180; John Ray to James Pike, recorded with said deeds, Book 904, Leaf 214. All of which said mortgages have been assigned, and are now held by the undersigned.

The Peabody Press.

THE INAUGURAL address of Gov. Butler has been more widely read and freely commented on by the press than any other document of its kind for many years. It is natural that it should be so. The history of the attempts of Gen. Butler to secure this coveted position is unprecedented in the annals of the state, and those who opposed his election are ready to acknowledge his ability and cannot deny that the message is readable, and contains many suggestions worthy of consideration. How far they will result in adoption rests with the legislature. Want of space this week prevents any extended resume of the document, did we so desire. We prefer to leave the discussion of the points on which he lays especial stress until the legislature, which is sure to take some action thereon, shall have brought them more prominently before the people of the State.

It was anticipated that the poll tax would receive his attention, and in this we are not dissappointed. He would have the poll tax assessed—he is hardly ready to advocate its entire abolition—but he would have it collected in the spring and summer, and not make it a requisite for voting. He would have registration in the cities and towns up to the time of opening the polls, which would leave the way open for the most gigantic frauds at the ballot. We do not think the people are ready yet to adopt this system, or make any change in the poll tax. We deprecate as much as he can the policy of either party, prior to elections, paying the poll taxes of citizens who otherwise would not vote. But we question if his remedy would reach the difficulty. The entire abolition of the tax would do so. This he admits would be unwise.

His ideas on woman suffrage have the merit of novelty. He is in favor of granting the elective franchise to them when they shall express the desire for it—which is the position taken by many if not most of our legislators. Butler's scheme for such expression is the novelty. He would have the registration of such women as desire, they to vote directly on the question whether they wished the suffrage extended. Herein would be the difficulty. The women suffragists would vote. Most of the others would not, and while it would not be a full and fair expression of the women of the state, it would undoubtedly be an expression in favor of the movement.

Probably his views on education will be more generally criticized than much of his address. He thinks the salaries paid to teachers is too high, and considering that by his own figures the average price of male teachers is less than $1000, we doubt if the people of the state will agree with him. His insinuations that the spelling book is banished from our public schools and that more attention is paid to music, drawing, botany and the like; his strictures against the normal schools, and his theory that the percentage of illiteracy in the state is very high, leading to the inference that our educational facilities are meagre,--all this is open, justly, to criticism. It will also serve as a text for the opponents of the public school system, and thus do an amount of harm beyond the obvious design of the author.

In regard to our public charities, our institutions for the support of the poor, the blind, and the insane, they are an honor to Massachusetts. She is proud of the money they have cost, and no words of Butler will impair their usefulness, or lead to regret on the part of the people at the expenditures for their support.

Gen. Butler announces his determination not to be again a candidate for Governor; an indication that the attainment of the office has gratified his ambition, or that he is looking for something higher, the latter of which is the more likely to be the case.

Mr. Frank Cousins, at the Bee Hive, will take account of stock next Friday. Previous to that time he will offer wonderful bargains to reduce the stock. Just think nice hats for 9 cents and 30 yard pieces of Hamburg edging for 5 cents. Mr. Cousins will begin the alteration of his store about the first of February.

Mr. David Conrad made a big hit last week selling, or rather giving away linen towels at three cents apiece. Bargains in other departments were offered.

Dramatic and Musica

This is the last week of the "World" at the Boston Theatre, and our readers will bear it in mind if they desire to witness the closing representations. Next week John McCullough will appear as Virginius, supported by Miss Kate Forsythe, J. S. Haworth and his own company. He will be assured of a warm welcome.

Salvini closes this week at the Globe, and it is the last engagement of any length which he will play in Boston. Thursday and Saturday evenings the "New Magdalen" will be presented. Next week Samuel Colville's company will appear in "Taken from Life."

At the Park Theatre Mr. & Mrs. McKee Rankin, (Miss Kitty Blanchard) will appear. Their success in the "Danites" is well known. The new play is considered better in many respects than the Danites, and it will be brought out with all the customary liberality of the Park stage. They will remain for two weeks. Preparations for the new play of "Courage" are being rapidly completed.

After his Boston Theatre engagement John McCullough plays the New England circuit for the first time in four years. He is announced for Salem in February. The Boston Theatre's traveling company will soon retire "Youth," and produce "The White Slave" on the New England circuit. In its production Mrs. Thos. Barry, Louise Muldener, Mr. Redmund and others of the home theatre will appear.

During Mr. McCullough's second week at the Boston, beginning January 15, "The Gladiator" and other favorite plays in the tragedian's repertory will be produced.

The wonderful educated horses at the Windsor Theatre are town talk. This is the last week of their exhibition.

Mr. Dion Boucicault wrote to a London friend the other day: "If you want to see 'Iolanthe' presented as it should be you must come to Boston and visit the Bijou." More sincere compliment to the production of the opera by the Collier company could not be asked, and Manager Tyler may well feel gratified at such words of commendation. The ideal "Iolanthe," which invariably attracts a crowd, will continue the Bijou attraction until further notice.

Moulton & Johnson have many good things in store for their patrons at Mechanic Hall. To-night Rice's Opera Company appear in "Iolanthe," which will be brought out in splendid style.

Monday evening next, Denman Thompson appears as Joshua Whitcomb, and all the old friends of Uncle Joshua and many new ones, will be on hand to greet him. That there will be a full house goes without saying, and an early purchase of seats is desirable.

There was a full house at the Vokes family's appearance last Thursday night. This company has lost none of their old prestige, and every point was greeted with laughter and applause.

The production of the English Comedy of "An Unequal Match," by Ada Dyas of Wallack's theatre, at Mechanic Hall, Monday evening, should have been better patronized. Miss Dyas is not only a fine actress, but her support was excellent. Those who did attend were well repaid therefor.

Willie Edouin's Company, including Miss Alice Atherton, will appear in the Peabody Institute Monday evening, in "Dreams." They filled the Globe theatre in Boston at every performance a few weeks since, and the entertainment is one that is seldom seen in town. They will not play in Salem; in fact, several Salem people have signified their intention of coming to Peabody to see it. The Cadet Orchestra, seven pieces, is to furnish the music, and we sincerely hope the hall will be packed. Tickets are to be had at Starr C. Hewitt's.

The Lynn & Boston horse railroad makes the best showing, for the money invested, of any road running into Boston. Under the management of President Amos F. Breed, the business of the road has been built up, its tracks put into first-class condition, and extended to meet the wants of travel in various directions, while other extensions and improvements are in contemplation. The stock, which was nearly valueless at the time of his assuming control, is eagerly sought after at a premium of 25 per cent. This showing is highly creditable to him as a practical business man and able financier.—Lynn Union.

Original Poetry.

[Lines addressed to the Great Elm, on the Kendall Osborn Farm, recently cut down.]

BY WALTER SCOTT LOVEJOY.

Majestic, stately, grand old tree,
Alas! that we must part,
And sever tender memories,
That cluster round my heart.

Oh, cruel fate that did decree,
Thy life should now be o'er,
The woodman's axe has laid thee low,
To rise again no more.

Dismembered now is thy grand form,
Ten cords by measure rated,
Thy noble trunk and limbs alas,
Are doomed to be cremated.

Beneath thy broad and shady boughs,
In childhood's happy day,
I spent the hours in youthful sport,
With loved ones passed away.

And oft in boyhood's daring time,
I climbed and reached the goal,
Where swung within her balloon nest,
The golden oriole.

At midday oft in later years,
The sunshine o'er thy crest,
With other sons who tilled the soil,
I spent the "nooning" hour of rest.

Oh happy hours, forever flown,
Oh loved and cherished friend,
I ask is this the last of life,
Must here our friendship end?

Is there no future life for thee,
No Heavenly forest glade?
Where, through the vast eternity,
Thou'l't cast thy giant shade.

Where may be heard the song of birds,
And ring of laughter clear,
Of youth and age, now passed away,
Whom thou did'st shelter here.

As birds and boys, as trees and men,
Shall we not meet again?
If naught be lost, then meet we must,
And until then I'll trust, I'll trust.
Danvers Dec. 30, '82.

TO PRINCE, the old family horse of Mr James Marsh, who died suddenly Dec. 13th, 1882.

BY ONE OF THE FAMILY.

You came in your youth, and left us in age:
A Prince among horses, for work did engage;
You rightly were named, all who knew you'll allow,
As they followed your steps with buggy or plough.
Ah, well I remember when long you had stood,
How you'd step o'er the road to your stable and food.
No load was so heavy but you'd bend to the work,
And as true as the steel were ne'er known to shirk.
You took us to church in sunshine and cloud,
If you were not improved, you spoke not aloud,
You knew it was Sunday, you cunning old steed,
And to draw on the rein, there was never a need;
For were we too early, or were we quite late,
You always were sorry to pass by the gate
That led to the sheds, where with horses you knew,
The week's work and wages could pass in review.
And if you were pleased with the work, and the hay
In which you'd been used, a low suppressed neigh
Could be heard in the church, causing some heads to turn,
But then we were certain your ears did not burn.
At all kinds of work, in all kinds of weather,
You always were ready, alone, or together
With Tom, Dolly or Dick, the first or the last,
Whichever or wherever your lot it seemed cast.
In youth your sleek coat was all dappled with grey,
With mane and tail silver; and then 'twas the way
You carried your head, made you known through the town
In your work-a-day dress, or your holiday gown.
Dress always became you; I certainly think
A new saddle and bridle would cause you to wink;
As much as to say "can't I hold up my head
With other pet horses as well groomed and fed?"
But hark! did you hear Master talk of a sale,
And in his endeavor you meant he should fail?
Did you scent a new Master, or fear a new home
Where you never could nibble, by stick or by stone
A bit of green grass so juicy and sweet,
Or lie down and roll on the spot where your feet
Had marked out the place, and turn round and round,
To make yourself sure no stone could be found
To break your stout limbs or scar your smooth side,
Or bring on you ills that could horses be tide?
We've watched your returning from market and mill,
Both up street and down street and over the hill;
But our eyes may grow dim as we see through the mist,
For you've carried your last apple, and brought your last grist.
The last ride you gave me I shall not forget;
Had I known 'twas the last, it were filled with regret.
It were well, poor old Prince, if thy end were so near,
We saw not thy going, but would fain drop a tear
As we think, kind old fellow, so noble, so true
Thou art gone to thy rest, and we bid thee adieu.

Selected Story.

Minerva's Elopement.

BY BELLE BROOKS.

Miss Minerva Barrett sat by the fireside knitting, on a cold November evening. The very personification of homely comfort and quiet contentment she seemed, as she went round and round the gray woolen stocking she was knitting for her brother Daniel, plying the bright needles with her usual swiftness and dexterity, not once forgetting to turn the seam according to rule (she always seamed Daniel's stockings "two and one," and Andrew's "two and two.") Yet this placid exterior, this picture so suggestive of serene enjoyment, was no more a true index of Miss Minerva's innermost feelings, than are the green grass and flowering shrubs on a certain mountain-top, indicative of the volcanic fires that are seething beneath its surface.

Never, perhaps, had the good woman's mind been in a more tumultuous state. Thoughts wildly divergent, sweetly pathetic and grimly grotesque, of brave self-denial and dire revenge, emotions of pure love and intense hatred, and sympathy and disdain, were surging wildly about, crowding and jostling each other in the most unceremonious manner.

There was ample reason for this mighty perturbation of spirit, for this hitherto worthy example of all the moral and Christian virtues, the long accepted model of strictest propriety, was, on this eventful evening, deliberately, although somewhat nervously, planning an elopement.

This ridiculous and unheard-of step for a woman past fifty years, and an avowed skeptic in matters pertaining to the tender passion, was but the culminating point of an affair over which she had been perplexed and distressed for weeks, a simple love affair, that had gone somewhat awry.

Miss Minerva recognized the absurdity of her position from the first, and told herself again and again that it mattered very little how the affair turned, and that she was not going to bother her head about it; and then spent much of the day and long hours of the night in planning to turn it in the right direction.

It was not her own love affair, let us hasten to explain—Miss Minerva had had no lovers for at least thirty years, was never known to acknowledge having had one even then, but her old neighbors often spoke to each other of Calvin Stone, the handsome young grocer, that had been assiduously devoted to her for a season; but just as they were anticipating a bid to the wedding, he had sold out his store, and departed for California, while Minerva seemed suddenly transformed from a merry hearted girl to a staid and rather cynical woman.

A few years after this event, both her parents died, and she lived alone in the old home they had bequeathed to her until a brother dying, left to her care his already motherless child.

She gladly received her niece and namesake and the two lived on in quiet contentment really tenderly attached to each other, although few outward demonstrations of affection or little confidences were indulged in.

When Minnie (for so the younger Minerva was called) was twenty years of age, she was both pretty and interesting, and Harry Campbell, a former schoolmate, by the frequency of his visits, gave evidence that he was not oblivious to the fact.

With this Miss Minerva was secretly well pleased, but made no comment. She showed especial favor to the young man, however, in her own way. Her usual hour for retiring was ten o'clock, but on the evenings of his visit she would commence to yawn precisely at a quarter past eight, and at half-past, declaring she "could not keep her eyes open another minute," would betake herself to bed, leaving the young people well satisfied with her mode of expressing it.

But this highly satisfactory state of affairs was doomed to interruption.

Professor Damon, a teacher of music and German, came into the place, and being highly recommended, was duly engaged as an instructor for Minnie. He soon became much interested in this particular pupil, and took every advantage of his position to ingratiate himself in her favor, often coming in to spend the evening under pretence of assisting her in her studies. Miss Minerva made no objections to these extra and gratuitous services, but she was no longer troubled with sleepiness, and never left the parlor until he had taken leave. She had disliked the suave professor from the first, just why she could have no more told than could a certain individual explain her aversion to the renowned Dr. Hall; but the aversion was none the less sincere. Just how her neice was affected by the flattering attentions of her new admirer, she was unable to determine, but that Harry Campbell was made miserable and unhappy by them was evident enough.

He had stood his ground bravely for a while, coming in even oftener than had been his custom, but finding himself constantly forestalled by the professor, who managed to monopolize the greater share of his pupil's attention, his visits grew less frequent, and for nearly two weeks he absented himself altogether. Then came the crisis.

On the afternoon preceding the evening of Miss Minerva's strange mental agitation, to which allusion has been made, she had stepped into the yard and was sweeping the dry leaves from the walk, when a boy came in the gate and handed her a letter directed to "Miss Minerva Barrett."

Thinking it to be a note from the coal dealer to whom she had recently addressed a line in regard to her winter's supply of that commodity, she hastily tore it open, and leaning over the broomhandle glanced at its contents. The first line almost took her breath away, and she sat down on the door-step. She had read nearly through an ardent epistle commencing with "My darling, my own precious dear," before she fully comprehended that it was her niece, not herself, for whom the letter was intended, and contained a direct proposal from Professor Damon for her to leave the protection of her aunt, whom he styled the "most terrible of gorgons," and fly with him that very night.

"Only a word, one little word, bidding me come," he pleaded, "and I will be at the lower gate at twelve o'clock with a carriage which will take us to the depot, and then—away to love and happiness."

Indignant and bewildered, Miss Minerva entered the house hardly knowing what course to pursue. Minnie was in the parlor with a young lady friend that had dropped in to take tea with them, and remembering her niece's promise to accompany the friend home and spend the night, a sudden impulse seized her, and taking a sheet of note paper she wrote "come," and, without signature, placed it in an envelope and gave it to the waiting boy.

What her ultimate purpose was in this, Miss Minerva hardly stopped to consider. But she had a vague idea of going a certain distance with the villain herself (disguised as her neice) and at some auspicious moment publicly to expose and denounce his villainy, and then leave him, too deeply chagrined and humiliated to dare return.

She had many misgivings as to the feasibility of her wild scheme that evening as she sat before the fire nervously planning the details, while the girls chatted over their fancy work; but when at last they bade her good night, and went away leaving her alone, a looked of fixed determination came into her face, and she at once commenced active preparations for its furtherance.

Uncoiling her hair, which was still dark and abundant, she, with some difficulty, rearranged it in the girlish braids and puffs her niece was in the habit of wearing; then, arraying herself in a full suit of young girl's apparel, a dress of dark blue cashmere and stylish dolman, with a jaunty hat, bright tie, and many-buttoned gloves, she stood before the glass amazed to see how great was the resemblance, and felt moderately certain she would not be detected. Tying a thick veil over her face she slipped out of the back door as the clock struck twelve, and hurried to the lower gate.

The lover was in waiting with a carriage, and with a fervent "you have come, my darling," Miss Minerva was lighted in, and they drove rapidly away. The presence of the driver prevented any verbal love-making, but the professor clasped her hand tightly in his own, giving it an occasional squeeze that fairly made her wince, for Minerva's glove was a trifle small for the aunt's well-developed hand.

With the pretence of holding up the buffalo robe, he kept an arm about her waist, while Miss Minerva sat bolt upright and grated her teeth.

Now and then, under cover of the darkness, he raised her veil sufficiently to implant a passionate kiss upon the tightly compressed lips, which she mentally resented, but bore in heroic silence—removing the contaminating touch of the odious moustache so far as possible, by the free use of Minerva's perfumed handkerchief.

Once aboard the cars, amid the crowd of uninterested passengers, they were comparatively secluded, and the professor said many charming and tender things to the supposed Miss Minerva, in a cowing undertone, evidently well satisfied with the rapt attention of his listener, and her occasional whispered monosyllables in reply.

But to Miss Minerva the situation was anything but delightsome. She was becoming more and more disgusted with her companion, and felt she could no longer endure his presence.

As they reached a station some fifty miles from home, where he had told her they were to change cars, she longed to throw off her disguise and leave him then and there, but hesitated, fearing the denouement might be premature, involving the risk of his return.

Fortune favored her desires. They had just entered the depot to wait a few moments for the western train, when a gentleman, whose face she did not see, but whose voice somehow carried her back to her girlhood, tapped the professor on the shoulder, exclaiming:

"James Hammond, can it be that you are still in the land of the living? Your parents have thought you dead for years."

The professor turned deathly pale as he muttered something about "miscarried letters."

"But who may your traveling companion be?" demanded the stranger. "It surely is not your wife, for I saw her in California the day before I left."

"Only the daughter of a friend who was placed in my care," was the unblushing answer.

"A being quite too youthful to travel without fatherly protection, you will perceive, sir," remarked Miss Minerva, taking off her veil and turning toward them.

"Great Heavens defend us!" was the polite ejaculation of the professor as he gazed at the wrinkled face upon which he had lavished such endearments.

"Minerva Barrett! is it possible this is you?" cried the stranger, his voice and countenance expressing no less surprise, but far less disgust, than did the professor's.

"It is," was the joyful answer, as Miss Minerva placed both her hands in those of Calvin Stone.

"But why are you in company with that scoundrel, who has miserably deserted his family and left them to suffer in sickness and poverty?" was the anxious query.

"I was eloping with him," said Minerva. And then she told her story, although the recital was wholly lost on the professor, who was speeding alone away on his westward journey.

After she had finished, Mr. Stone told a story of his own, the opening chapter of which dated back some thirty years. It must have been a tale of deep interest and pathos, for the tears stood in Miss Minerva's eyes during its relation, and at its close she said: "O, Calvin, how foolish I have been, and how much we both have suffered for my folly."

The next afternoon, when Minerva returned from her visit, she found a strange gentleman in the parlor, sitting on the sofa in close proximity to her aunt, from whom all stiffness and austerity of manner seemed to have vanished.

"We are going to be married on Thanksgiving day," Miss Minerva said to her niece, as the two sat before the fire that evening, "and I think you and Harry may as well be married at the same time."

"I—I don't know as Harry wants to marry me now," was the tremulous reply; he has acted so strangely of late. I'm afraid he is offended because Prof. Damon comes here so much, but it isn't my fault. I really wish he would stay away."

"Perhaps he will," was all Miss Minerva said, and it was not until after the double wedding had really taken place that Minerva learned the story of her aunt's elopement.—Chicago Saturday Evening Herald.

A BARBER'S LAMENT—A journeyman barber in a prosperous down-town shop said yesterday, to a HERALD reporter: "I wish somebody would write a piece about these barbers who keep open Sundays."

"Why?"

"Because they are a set of low-downers, anyway. They disgrace the business by making it appear as if a barber had to work seven days in a week to make a mere living."

"Where do you find these barbers?"

"Oh, you'll find plenty of them over in East and South Boston, on——street, and at the North end. They are patronized by a class of men who only shave once a week—it's the only day in the week that they get cleaned up. They come into the barber's shop with a week's stubble on their faces, and expect to be treated like lords for 10 cents. They want the barber to shave them, give them a clean paper collar and a glass of beer for 5 cents. That is what they are grumbling about all the time. They think they don't get enough for their money. They want their once-a-week barber to wash their faces and black their boots, too. The less a man pays for a service the more he wants."

"Well, how would you remedy this trouble?"

"Shut up shop Saturday night, and keep shut up till Monday morning. There isn't a man in Boston but can get shaved on a week day, or on a week day night. If a man works all night he can find time to go to his barber's on an afternoon."

Here the Figaro presiding at the next chair spoke up: "I would rather die than work in one of those Sunday having places."

"Die! that's a strong word, isn,t it?"

"Not any too strong."—Boston Herald.

"WITNESS MY HAND AND SEAL."—A thousand years ago the masses, the nobility, the poor and rich, were wholly unacquainted with the mysteries of the alphabet and the pen. A few men, known as clerks, who generally belonged to the priesthood, monopolized them as a special class of artists. They taught their business only to their seminaries, apprentices; and beyond themselves and their few pupils, no one knew how to read and write, nor was it expected of the generality, any more than it would be now-a-days that everybody should be a shoemaker or a lawyer. Kings did not even know how to sign their names, so that when they wanted to subscribe to a written contract, law or treaty, which some clerk had drawn up for them, they smear their right hand with ink, and slap it down upon the parchment, saying, "witness my hand." At a later date, some genius devised the substitute of a seal, which was impressed instead of the hand. Every gentleman had a seal with a peculiar device thereon. Hence the sacramental words now in use, "Witness my hand and seal," affixed to modern deeds, serves at least the purpose of reminding us of the Middle Ages.

TAKEN FOR A MINISTER.—Our night foreman is a religious man, tried and true. He is a regular attendant at religious meetings, and on a recent Sunday, at the conclusion of the services the minister stepped from the pulpit, and grasping our foreman's hand apologized for not inviting him into the pulpit. To say that the young man was astonished would be drawing it mild.—N. Y. Herald.

TRAINED SEALS.

T are exhibited in the largest tank at the uarium, which was constructed for the ite whale, and has been recently devot to the exposition of the natatorial pow of Miss Annie Beckwith. At one end mall tent has been erected on a platforrised a couple of inches above the wat From the upper surface of this the seals glide into the fluid or return at will their first performance was a violent tug at two bell pulls, to give notice to the ors. The bells were in hideous discord the noise was continued far too long the comfort of the audience. The bell moved, the animals took, at the comd of their keeper, their stations on two lined boards, which raised their head fore limbs above the general surface the platform. To one hand-like fore of the male was attached a cymbal, with ich it struck another conveniently plac front, while the female was playing mbourine by striking it with very grea pidity. The musical discord was variy the keeper holding a banjo to the smal performer, who evoked hideous soun by rapidly scraping across the strin with her nails. This done, the audien were informed that the animals were abou indulge in smoking. Short pipes, abou inches long, were placed in their mou from the bowls of which issued flamone or two inches high. On my first it both animals held these flaming pipe their mouths, but on my second the e declined, having been alarmed by the mear approach of the flame to his face Various articles, as baskets, logs of woo &c., were then thrown into the wate and were quickly and easily retrie and brought to the keeper's hand by bothe animals. The next performance consed in both the animals climbing up, by aid of their fore limbs, a ladder risin from the surface of the water, at an angl of about forty-five degrees. After divi into the water from the top of the ladd the animals shot themselves by the impas of their rapid motion on to the platm, and seizing a couple of short cord attached to revolvers, fired a rapid succsion of shots. The performance conded by a remarkable exposition of the strength possessed by those animals when in t water. A small boat capable of holding ree children, whose united weights mus have been about eight or nine stone, was ragged very rapidly around the tank by e two seals in succession. A small collr was placed over the head, to which trac were attached that were secured to the boat. The strength displayed by the seals was remarkable; the little boat, pulled by the muscular strength of one animal, threw off the water from its bows as if it had been propelled by a vigorous sculler. The exhibition was to me of a peculiarly interesting character. The animals manifested a great degree of intelligence and docility, in keeping with their high cerebral development. Nevertheless, they have their peculiar mental idiosyncrasies. One of their characteristics is extreme susceptibility to alarm; the slightest alteration or fright will throw them out of work, and it is difficult to reassure them. Their training was effected by a system of rewards, without any punishment, and the visitors may notice a piece of fish dropped into the mouth of each after the performance of every trick. The amount of fish devoured by these two animals is about three hundred pounds per diem. The oleaginous Clupeidæ, herrings, pilchards, &c., are preferred; but, failing these, whitings, haddocks, &c., are given, these being carefully cut open to insure the absence of any fish-hooks, which have repeatedly caused the death of captive seals, and possibly of wild ones also.—The London Field.

A STEAM TRICYCLE.

A Buffalo man has perfected an important invention which is nothing less than a steam tricycle. It is expected that it is destined to revolutionize the modes of travel on the highway. It at first sight resembles a low, open buggy or buckboard. The seat is placed between the two principal wheels, the third wheel being in front, about five feet away from the others. It is smaller, and is used for guiding the vehicle. The two main wheels are the same as those used in bicycles. The motive power is applied to them by means of a small spur wheel and a few feet of belting or chain. The engine and boiler are located between the seat and the forward wheel. They take up very little space, and much of the machinery will be inclosed in a wooden case when the vehicle is complete. The engine is one and a half horse power, and it rests on the bottom of the conveyance. The exhaust is underneath, and will be nearly noiseless and invisible. The cylinder is two by four inches. The generator is upright and stands directly over the neat little boiler. For fuel gasoline is used, and two gallons of this fluid, surrounded by water, will be carried in a reservoir under the seat. It will be conveyed to the furnace by means of tubes. It is claimed that one gallon will be sufficient to run the engine for nine hours at the rate of from fifteen to twenty miles an hour. The tricycle as it now stands cost about two hundred dollars, but but it can be duplicated for one hundred and fifty dollars.—Boston Globe.

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at Spaulding's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at the above Drug Store.

WHAT IT COST.—Fifteen millions of barrels of beer were consumed in this country last year, at the cost to the consumers of $480,000,000. There were seventeen million gallons of liquor consumed, which cost $313,000,000. Adding wines, the money spent in liquor every years makes up a total of $800,000,000. As all our taxes, national, State, city, county, and town are stated, on the authority of the Census Bureau, to be about $700,000,000, it follows that we spend more in liquor, by $100,000,000 yearly, than we do for the whole machinery of our national, State, and local goverments. But even this does not tell the whole story, for there are statistics which show that 84 per cent. of all the crime in the country is due to the use of liquor. One in every twenty of the able-bodied men of this country is made a pauper, a loafer, or a criminal, by drink. If all these men were capable of constant work, they would make not less than $200,000,000,000 per annum. This makes the liquor tax fully $1,000,000,000 per annum, more than half our national debt, and $200,000,000 more than the total of all our exports. Is it any wonder that some people become fanatical, in contemplating the enormity of the liquor traffic?—Demorest's Monthly.

What is needed is pure blood, as the influence of its purity upon the health cannot be overestimated. When it becomes impure, it gives rise to a large number of diseases, such as biliousness, sick headache, dyspepsia, loss of appetite, low spirits, nervousness, female complaints, etc. The success which has attended the use of Swedish Botanic Compound warrants us to say that for purifying and enriching the blood, creating an appetite, strengthening and renovating the whole system, nothing surpasses that great remedy.

WHAT HE THOUGHT OF THE DIRECTORS COLLECTIVELY.— Years ago when there were not so many Banks here on Cape Ann as now, a young man who had just gone into business wished to get his note discounted, and in order to make a sure thing of it, he interviewed the Directors personally, and each told him that it would be all right. Going to the Bank on the morning after the Directors had met, the Cashier informed him very blandly that nothing had been done for him. At the next meeting of the Directors, just as they were commencing business, the door opened and in walked the young man. Removing his hat he advanced to the table, and remarked, "Messrs. Directors, individually, you are clever sort of men, but collectively you are a set of darned liars, and I can prove it." With this he went out, and the Directors gazed at each other in blank astonishment, as they inwardly acknowledged the justice of the remark.—C. A. Advertiser.

Consultation upon my case by eminent Naval and other surgeons failed to afford me the slightest relief. Dr. Hoyle recommended to me St. Jacobs Oil, the happy result of the use of which was my complete and wonderful cure.—Washington (D. C.) Army & Navy Register.

The retirement of Lewis Coleman from the firm of Lewis Coleman & Co., of Boston, is worthy of notice. The house of which he was the head, was the largest jobbing house in small wares in the city. It was known through the entire country to the trade. It was one of the very few firms that escaped the conflagration of the great fire, and through all the changes of location which the rebuilding of the burnt district, and the change in the center of trade has brought, this house has remained in its old quarters. His retirement was celebrated by a banquet at Young's, given to the salesmen,—an event which must have been one of sadness to all who participated.

[New Haven, (Conn.) Union.

HOW A LAWYER TREATED THE CASE.—I, David Strouse, of New Haven, Connecticut, was attacked with a severe rheumatism in my right arm, hand and foot, so that I walked with difficulty and could hardly use my hand to eat with. I used one bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, rubbing well three times a day, and obtained instant relief and a perfect cure.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

WE DEVOTE considerable space this week to the exercises of the semi-centennial at the Universalist Church. They were of remarkable interest, and we know our readers who could not be present, will desire to read the able historical sketch by Mr. Amos Merrill, which, through his courtesy, we are enabled to publish in full.

The Boston Sunday Globe, Dec. 17th, published a letter written by Richard Crowningshield, Jr., to his sister Sally, from Salem Jail. It having never before been published, we reproduce it to-day in our columns. The particulars of the Knapp trial, the masterly argument of Daniel Webster,—are not unfamiliar to the older portion, at least, of our readers. Richard Crowningshield, Jr., hung himself in the jail June 15, and this letter was written, as will be seen, a month previous to that event:

SALEM, May 15, 1830.

DEAR SALLY—You kindly reminded me of my fast approaching birthday, which draws from me the following lines:

Unhappy day! You find me in a gloomy cell,
And thoughts of keen sensation in my bosom dwell.
In my infant years I was happy, then by my friends caressed;
I am now misfortune's deadly aim, and by the world opprest.
There is one consolation on the buoyant wing of time,
That is, my soul is free from guilt of this most horrid crime.

How visionary are the things of this life! No one knows what the next day may bring forth, or whether we may not in the next hour be called into eternity to give an account of ourselves to that Supreme Being who sent us into existence. The more I reflect on this subject the more I am sensible we ought to guide our minds in the faith of rectitude and virtue. But a few days since I enjoyed contentment and liberty. I had the most pleasing prospect of passing a cheerful summer with you, unconscious of the malicious plots and malicious plots and hellish schemes, contrived to blast our characters—our all in life. Now, doomed to spend my youthful days in a solitary prison, I sometimes consider it a vision—I would to God it was so; but I know too well the reality of the reverse. Had the committee of vigilance requested us to give an account of ourselves we would cheerfully have done so to their entire satisfaction. The perjured State prison convict they intend to bring as evidence against us will be none to their credit. What prompts him to this confession is an anticipation of getting pardoned from the State prison, or it is wealth. I leave this to an impartial jury to decide.

I will write again soon.

Your affectionate brother
R. C., JR.

Semi Centennial at the Universalist Church.

The severe storm affected very visibly the attendance at the anniversary exercises which had been arranged at this church, but not the interest manifested by those who were present. An audience filling nearly half the body of the church, listened to the opening exercises which began at 2.25 o'clock, by a Voluntary by Nellie Bartlett, the organist of the church, followed by singing by the choir, under the direction of W. P. Clark, Esq., "Saviour Source of every Blessing;" after which Rev. F. A. Dillingham, of Danvers, offered prayer; after response by the choir, Rev. Mr. Sprague, the pastor, referred to the occasion which called the people together, viz., the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of the church, the golden wedding of its organization as a parish. Such an event is worthy of special service; Mr. Sprague then feelingly alluded to the members now living who were associated with the early organization, and to the interest it must be to them, and in behalf of the Peabody Church, cordially welcomed the visitors. The historical address by Amos Merrill was then delivered which was as follows:—

The First Universalist Parish of Peabody was organized on the sixth of April, 1832, under the title "The Second Universalist Society of Danvers." Universalist meetings had been held occasionally in private houses, sometimes in a small hall in the building now occupied in part by the PEABODY PRESS Office, in the school house then located near the Old South Church and also in Joseph Shedd's Hall, a small hall in the building now occupied in part by W. T. Lee's apothecary shop. For a few years before the organization of the society, a few families regularly attended the Universalist meeting at Salem; the families of Eben S. Upton, Daniel Dodge, Mrs. Stanley, Joseph Tufts, Jr., and Lewis Allen were of this number. Only a few persons were then known as pronounced Universalists, although a considerable number would not accept the Calvinistic Doctrines as then held and taught.

On the thirty-first day of January, 1832, a preamble and resolution were adopted and signed by forty-three persons with reference to the building of a church and forming a Universalist Society. Of this preamble and resolution, the following is an extract, "Whereas at this time the religious community is much excited and great exertions made by different denominations to spread the gospel according to the tenets of their respective creeds, which have caused many to search the scriptures for themselves, thereby establishing in their minds a firm belief in the doctrine of God's impartial love and goodness towards all mankind. And whereas a large number of persons belonging to the South Parish in Danvers and its immediate vicinity who are hearers of said doctrine are under the necessity of traveling a great distance to attend public worship, or go to meeting where they cannot be satisfied, it has been suggested that there ought to be a provision made for the accommodation and support of public worship in this place, and for the purpose of accomplishing the same to issue a subscription paper to see what can be obtained; and in case there should be enough subscribed to warrant the undertaking to buy a lot of land in the vicinity of the Old South Church in Danvers and erect a suitable meeting house for the accommodation of the Universalists. Now therefore we, the subscribers, considering the importance and necessity of establishing a Universalist Church in this place, agreeably to the foregoing statement, do hereby agree to take the shares set against our respective names and pay for the same the sum of one hundred dollars for each share."

On the twenty-sixth day of March following, a meeting of subscribers was held in Shedd's Hall and a committee appointed to find a suitable place for building a house. At this meeting it was voted to petition John W. Proctor, a Justice of the Peace, to issue a call for a meeting for the organization of a society. The following form of an agreement for organization was drawn up and signed at this meeting: "We whose names are hereunto subscribed, impressed with the belief that the public support of institutions for the worship of God and the improvement of ourselves in religious knowledge, is one of the best means in our power of doing good in the community in which we live; and knowing that such institutions cannot be advantageously supported except by the association of individuals for this purpose, do hereby agree to unite in the formation of a religious society under the name of the Second Universalist Society in Danvers; and do hereby pledge ourselves, each to the other to exert our influence as far as in our power to promote the prosperity and well being of said society, while we shall continue members of the same."

This paper was signed by forty-seven persons, most or all of whom were subscribers for shares in the church. Of the number who signed this instrument, ten only are now living, and only two are now members of this parish, Mr. Jacob Bodge and Joseph W. Tufts; and only one, Mr. Bodge, was present at the meeting when the paper was adopted and signed. In accordance with a petition drawn up at this meeting and signed by Eben S. Upton and fourteen others a warrant was issued by John W. Proctor, Esq., for a meeting to be held in Shedd's Hall on the sixth of April, 1832. Joseph Shedd, one of the petitioners, was authorized to notify the members; and on the day named the meeting was held and called to order by John W. Proctor, Esq. Asa T. Newhall, Esq., was chosen Moderator, and William D. Joplin, Clerk. Eben S. Upton was chosen Treasurer. Joseph Tufts, Jr., Eben S. Upton, Lewis Allen, Daniel Dodge and Joseph Shedd were chosen a committee. Joseph Shedd, Asa T. Newhall and Lewis Allen were chosen a committee to draft By-Laws.

On the thirteenth day of April the By-Laws prepared by the committee were adopted. At this meeting the lot of land upon which the church now stands was selected and a building committee appointed, consisting of the following persons: Joseph Shedd, Joseph Tufts, Jr., Lewis Allen, Jefferson Taylor, Daniel Dodge. At a meeting held on the thirtieth of April by the building committee a plan for a church building was adopted. The contract for building the same was awarded to William Knowlton, Hiram Sanborn and Daniel P. Nourse. On the seventh day of January, 1833, the committee reported the building completed at a cost including land of $4,107.13. On the tenth of January the church was dedicated. The following clergymen were present and took part in the service, Revs. John Moore, Lemuel Willis, Thomas Whittemore, Sylvanus Cobb, Linus S. Everett. Mr. Moore preached the sermon. On the twenty-first of January an invitation was given to Mr. Moore to become pastor at a salary of $650. The invitation was accepted and he began his settlement on the twenty-fourth of February following. His installation took place on the fourth of April, 1833. The Rev. Thomas Jones, of Gloucester, preached the sermon, Revs. J. C. Waldo, L. S. Everett, Hosea Ballou and Lemue Willis assisting in the services.

On the 26th of May following, at a meeting of the society it was voted, "To request the Boston Association, which was to meet in Haverhill on the fifth of June, to extend its fellowship to this society. On the sixth of January, 1834, Lewis Allen was chosen a delegate to attend the Convention to be held in May following in the vicinity of Boston for the purpose of forming a State Convention. On the 16th of November, 1834, Mr. Moore resigned his position as pastor to take place on the 1st of January following. Mr. Moore was a remarkably genial man of fine social qualities, a good preacher and had the respect of the entire parish, and of the community so far as it was possible for a Universalist minister to be respected at that time. His resignation was caused by a conditional agreement made by him with his parish in Lebanon to return if they desired, and deemed his return essential to their welfare, and was a great disappointment to this parish. During his ministry a Sunday School was organized beginning with about fifty members. Mrs. Walker now a member of this parish was a teacher in the beginning of the organization, and Miss Sally Bodge, also a present member, a pupil. A church was organized by Mr. Moore on the 30th of April, 1834, consisting of twenty-four members.

On the 15th of February, 1835, the Rev. John M. Austin was unanimously invited to become pastor. Mr. Austin began his pastorate on the 29th of March following. He was installed on the 29th of April, 1835. The sermon was preached by Rev. Sylvanus Cobb. Other services were conducted by Revs. J. C. Waldo, Lemuel Willis and W. H. Knapp. When the church building was completed the vestry was left unfinished. There was then no public hall in town of sufficient size for meetings for town purposes. At a meeting of the society held on the 7th of February, 1836, permission was given for an association of persons called the Union Hall association, to finish the basement story of the church, the same to become the property of the society when the income for its use should be sufficient to repay the cost and interest; the society to use the hall when it desired. A meeting of the society was held on the 10th of February, 1843, to consider the subject of enlarging the Meeting-house by putting in galleries. A committee appointed to consider the matter reported that all of the seats were rented, and reported in favor of providing for more room and on the 24th of March a vote was passed to put galleries in the church. Galleries were erected in accordance with this vote at a cost of $369, furnishing room for twenty additional pews.

After a pastorate of nearly ten years, Mr. Austin tendered his resignation to take effect on the last Sunday in September, 1844. The affairs of the society were in a highly prosperous condition during the ministry of Mr. Austin, and were particularly so at the close. A religious revival, remarkable for its extent and intensity, had prevailed for the last two or three years of his ministry. And although intensely sectarian in the beginning, and dividing the liberal and evangelical churches more completely than they had been for several years previous, yet the immediate result was the rapid development of a deep and earnest interest in religion, quite as great in Universalist as in Evangelical churches. In this parish large numbers were added to the church. At the preaching service the church was generally filled and special meetings filled the house to overflowing. But while some advance was undoubtedly made in religious growth, and influences, which cannot be mentioned here, set in motion, which have resulted in permanent gain, yet the intensity of the great revival was quite too violent to be permanent, and in a short time a re-action followed. In this re-action this society had its share; not enough, however, to have stayed its work had not other causes intervened.

On the 20th of October, 1844, Rev. John Prince was invited to become pastor. He commenced his labor on the 17th of November following, and was installed as pastor on the 15th of January, 1845. Dr. T. B. Thayer preached the sermon, Revs. D. K. Lee, A. Peck, S. C. Bulkley, J. G. Adams and W. G. Cambridge took part in the services. Mr. Prince closed his pastorate on the last Sunday in June, 1848.

The great revival was followed by an unusual amount of discussion and doubt in regard to old forms of belief. Spiritualism was rapidly spreading; old faiths were challenged to substantiate their claims for acceptance and new forms of skepticism and unbelief made rapid progress. The Universalist church had within its ranks a class of young men, few in number but earnest and active, questioning some of the opinions generally held in the denomination both in regard to the authority and interpretation of the scriptures. The more conservative portion, embracing the older clergymen as well as a large portion of the young, were quite as earnest in defense of the opinions generally held as essential for fellowship. Mr. Prince was the most prominent of the young clergymen in his preaching and writing in opposition to the conservative portion of the church. The result of this was the rapid undermining of faith on the part of some and the decided protest of others. The merits of this discussion are not under consideration here. Important changes have taken place in religious thought and belief since that date of which mention cannot be made in this sketch. The result, however, to this society was of too much importance to fail of notice in this review of its history.

A division in the society was the immediate result. The withdrawal of Mr. Prince as pastor and the closing of the church soon followed. The church continued closed as a house of public worship until October 30, 1853. In October, 1853, Rev. J. W. Talbot called on a former member to confer with him concerning the reviving of the society and of establishing preaching. After a few other members had been consulted the determination was formed to establish preaching, and if possible in the old church, which was not then in the custody of those supposed to be favorable to the renewal of church work. But the time proved to be favorable and those having the custody of the church, and the old members of the society then living and in town were nearly all ready for the re-organization of the parish, and nearly all united in so doing. Mr. Talbot's efforts were highly successful and the society was established preaching beginning on the 30th of October, 1853, which has continued regularly from that time.

Mr. Talbot resigned at the close of one year, his object having been fully accomplished. During his stay the church was improved, the vestry enlarged, the foundation rebuilt and the organ now in use purchased; all paid for by the sale of pews and money raised by subscription amounting, including both sums, to $2,151. The society was without a pastor until November, 1853, when Rev. Orville Brayton commenced his pastorate. He was installed February 6, 1856. Rev. A. A. Miner, D. D., preached the sermon. Rev. E. G. Brooks, J. W. Putnam, Sumner Ellis, Charles Cravens, Henry Jewell and C. H. Dutton, assisted in the service. Mr. Brayton continued as pastor until September 1st, 1859. His ministry was a season of trial to the parish, severely testing its fidelity to what it regards as the essentials of christian faith. Great credit is due its members for remaining steadfast. There was much occasion to fear other results.

Rev. C. C. Gordon commenced as pastor in November 1859, continuing with the parish only one year. His ministry though brief was beneficial to the parish and he left it united and in good condition. The Rev. O. F. Safford was invited to become pastor on the 23d day of February, 1862, and began his work on the first Sunday in May following. He was installed on the 17th of June, 1863. Rev. J. G. Bartholomew preached the sermon. Revs. J. J. Twiss, Geo. S. Weaver, C. W. Biddle and J. W. Putnam assisted in the service. The society increased largely in numbers and interest during the ministry of Mr. Safford, but the offer of a more important position tempted him away and his pastorate closed at the end of his third year, the 1st of May, 1865. The Rev. A. B. Hervey became pastor on the first Sunday in April 1866. On the 2d of September, 1867, the society voted to remodel the church in accordance with plans prepared by Rufus Sargent, Esq. The work was immediately begun, the galleries taken out, new pews, pulpit and singing gallery put in, the porch and steeple added and additional land purchased. The sum of $4,030 had been raised by subscription before the work was commenced, but when completed the total cost of the work was $9,300, which, including a debt of $1,300, amounted to $10,600. The amount raised by subscription, together with the amount raised by the sale of pews, left a balance against the society of $5,600. At the annual meeting following, the full amount was raised and the debt paid; two members, Mr. John Pinder and Mr. Stephen Blaney, each paying one-fourth of the amount after having made, with others, liberal contributions to the first subscription. The amount offered by these two caused an equally generous response from other members and the required sum was promptly raised.

At this meeting a letter was read announcing that a bell was in the yard in front of the church which would be put in position in the belfry at the expense of the donor, the gift of a gentleman who desired that his name should be withheld. The church was re-dedicated on the 4th of March following in 1868. The sermon was preached by the pastor. The other exercises were conducted by the Revs. G. W. Whitney, Willard Spaulding and O. F. Safford. The affairs of the society were in a prosperous condition during the ministry of Mr. Hervey, which closed in November, 1872, after nearly seven years of faithful service. Mr. Hervey left the society united and in good condition and the Sunday School larger than at any other period of its history, numbering nearly two hundred members.

The Rev. S. P. Smith became pastor on the first Sunday in October 1873, and continued until the 12th of March, 1876, when he resigned his charge. During the ministry of Mr. Smith an addition was built to the vestry, furnishing rooms for a kitchen and parlor and other improvements, made at a cost of $1,181.42. On the 30th of April, 1876, the Rev. E. W. Whitney commenced his pastorate. His installation took place on the 8th of November following. The sermon was given by Rev. A. A. Miner, D. D.; Revs. G. W. Whitney, J. N. Emery, H. Closson and J. G. Adams, D. D. took part in the services. The church, which had been greatly reduced in number and inactive, was reorganized by Mr. Whitney on the 6th of May, 1877, with forty-one members. At the annual meeting in January 1879, the society voted to raise the church in order to give more height to the vestry, to newly finish the vestry and make an entrance to the same from the front of the church. This work was done at a cost of $2,474.45 and the full amount paid. The vestry and other rooms connected therewith were made easy of access and convenient and attractive rooms. Mr. Whitney having received a call to preach in Brattleborough, Vt., resigned his position here to close on the last Sabbath in December 1879.

On the 26th of January following, Rev. G. M. Harmon was invited to become pastor of the parish. The invitation was accepted and his pastorate began on the first Sunday in March, 1880. During the summer of 1881 improvements were made on the church, at a cost of $350.23. Mr. Harmon resigned as pastor, and closed his work here on the fourth Sunday in July last. The work of the last three ministers has been so recent as to be familiar to all of the present members of the parish, and needs not to be especially mentioned in this sketch; two of these are present here to day as well as three of an earlier date, and we should all be pleased if the last named in this paper, Rev. Mr. Harmon, could have joined with others in recalling some of the memoirs of their work here. Our present pastor, Rev. F. W. Sprague, began his ministry here on the first Sunday in September last.

Since the reopening of the church in 1853, there has been expended for remodelling and improving the church building, the purchase of an organ, piano and for additions and improvements made in the vestry independent of the annual and incidental expenses of the parish, the sum of $18,000. The parish is not free from debt. A deficiency exists arising from the expenditures of the last two years. But a proposal made at the annual meeting to raise by subscription a sum sufficient to cancel the debt and make certain improvements in the audience room will undoubtedly be successful; when this is done the church building in all respects, including the vestry and ante rooms, will be in good condition; and with the parish united and earnest, there seems to be nothing wanting so much for its continued prosperity and growth as a more permanent relation between pastor and people. Our present pastor has been with us only a brief period, but has already secured the confidence and regard of his people; if his pastorate can be continued into the coming years, and the relation of pastor and people to each other become stronger as the years advance, then the future work of this parish cannot fail of becoming better than any its past history has recorded.

During the past year a desire for a change in the organizations of the parish was found to exist among a portion of its members. A desire that the ownership of the church building should be vested in the parish rather that it should be held by individual holders of pew. A change in the By-Laws was also thought advisable. These changes were unanimously adopted. The owners of pews have deeded them to the parish, and the By-Laws recommended by the convention have been adopted. Full membership of the parish is secured by the rental of one or more seats in the church and signing the By-Laws which contain the "Winchester Confession of Faith." Those members of this parish, now few in number, who can recall its history of fifty years, will remember with pleasure the zeal and enthusiasm of its early ministers. The great prominence given to doctrinal preaching will certainly be recalled, especially the array of scripture texts, so frequently rehearsed in support of the doctrine held by this church by its early preachers, Mr. Moore and Mr. Austin. And not the preaching of these alone will be recalled. Many others also who have preached in this church will be remembered, whose vigorous and oftentimes eloquent defense of the doctrine and keen criticism of its opponents made an impression which can never be forgotten. Among these the names of Father Jones, Father Balfour, Hosea Ballou, Thomas Whittemore, Sylvanus Cobb, and of a later date, Hosea Ballou 2d, E. G. Brooks and E. H. Chapin will be remembered, all of whom have finished their work; and others, still living, able workers whose names will be identified with the history of the denomination during the first century of its organization.

But as we recall the past we should not fail to recognize the fact that great advance has been made in the progress of religious thought during the last fifty years, and especially in methods of interpreting the scriptures. Among scholars in all Protestant denominations there is less dependence for the support of especial doctrines of belief on isolated texts, and greater regard paid to the general tenor and spirit of the scriptures as a whole as a groundwork of Christian Faith. This change is especially prominent in the preaching of Universalist ministers. Other and still more important changes have been made during the past fifty years. Systems of belief if not entirely changed have been greatly modified; the harsher features of doctrines prominent in the preaching of fifty years since are quite unfamiliar to hearers of to-day. But notwithstanding the liberal tendencies of the latter half of the past fifty years, remarkable beyond precedent in the history of the Christian church, our work as a denomination must still be an important factor in religious progress. The positive faith of the Universalist church that the Wisdom, Power and Love of the Creator and Father of all are a sufficient and positive assurance of the final ingathering of all souls to Him to be accomplished in His own time and in His own way needs still further to be preached, if not after the old methods, with no less zeal and earnestness than in the olden time. It is the mission of the Universalist Church to set forth this doctrine, not dogmatically as in the past, but no less affirmatively; not as a speculation, but as a great central truth. To do this work as it needs to be done in this age of investigation, of criticism of ripe scholarship, it must not be content with what of truth it now holds, nor fail to recognize such facts as science may reveal, or philosophy discover, or such light as may become known from a more critical investigation of the scriptures. The Universalist church should be receptive of all truth which may serve to make known the plan and purpose of the Creator, and develop, enlighten and confirm christian faith.

While we hold the doctrine held by the founders of this parish no less firmly than they and desire that it shall continue to be preached in this pulpit as clearly and fully as by the fathers we trust that this church will give a generous reception to any additional light which the future may reveal, and that neither bigotry, prejudice, doubt nor unbelief shall turn it aside from an intelligent and well grounded faith in the truths revealed in the scriptures.

After Mr. Merrill's sketch, letters were read from Rev. John H. Moore, son of the first pastor of the church, now settled in Newark, N. J., and from Rev. G. M. Harmon. A hymn was then sung, when Mr. Sprague stated that a telegram had been received from Rev. Mr. Safford, saying that he would be present. At the opening neither Messrs. Talbot, Hervey, Safford or Smith were present. It became necessary, therefore, to vary somewhat from the anticipated programme, and Rev. Geo. Emerson, editor of the Christian Leader, was introduced. He referred to his early life in Henniker, N. H., where he heard in 1832 that the earth would be destroyed by a comet, and he really thought that in 1833 he should be somewhere else, and that somewhere a place of brimstone. While in great agony, thinking of the somewhere, he heard this remark, "I have been to the old meeting house and heard a Universalist say that all men would be saved." After that he did not care whether the comet hit or not. In that town a Universalist church was to be dedicated to-day and he was to be a speaker. The storm prevented his going there, and he was therefore here. He instituted a comparison between fighting for Universalism thirty years ago, and now.

At the close of his address Rev. E. C. Bolles, of Salem, spoke in his usual masterly and eloquent style. Dr. Bolles stated that he should vary somewhat from what he intended to say, and he enforced very earnestly the thought that less reliance was placed upon certain proof texts in the Bible, and deprecated the tendency of discarding the word of God, because certain portions of it could not be accepted. He referred to the doctrine of development, which lay at the bottom of everything, whether called by Darwinism, or anything else, and prophesied that the doctrines of Universalism, or to speak without regard to sectarianism, the impartial love of God, would be a power in the future. Spread over worlds or eternity, it would ever be more bright and perfect, and an expression of the central principle of human life.

Rev. Mr. Wilson followed, and gave some reminiscences of the past, and referred to his attendance at church fifty years ago. He gave as the chief reason for the spread of Universalism the inconsistencies of the old theology. After singing a congregational hymn, —all rising—Rev. O. F. Safford, who had just arrived, was introduced. He said that twenty-one years ago next May, he came from New York State to be pastor of this church, then in Sou Danvers. At one time during his pa torate, forty members of the pari were in the army. He spoke of t anxiety of those days of danger a sacrifice, related many war incide which occurred while he was in P body, and spoke strongly of the s port and friendship extended to him bygone years. His whole address very pleasantly and tenderly express

Rev. A. B. Hervey spoke humorc ly of his work and its effect upon audience. He stated that there w one hundred families when he began pastorate, and when he left there w one hundred and fifty. Rev. Mr. W ney was the last speaker. He gave his usual pleasant manner some ren iscences of his labors here, saying he and the church always made point to have some special work to complish. He spoke feelingly of cordial sympathy he had received in labors for the re-organization of church, and at the close of his rema supper was served in the vestry. bles had been spread, and the ladi the parish were assiduous in their forts at hospitality. This evening dresses will be delivered by L Messrs. Hervey and Safford. the for gentleman speaking on "The V roots of Universalism," and the la on the "Outlook of the Universa Church."

HOME HAPPENINGS.

For some years the Nat. W. C. T. U. have been petitioning the Evangelical Alliance to place the sin of intemperance among the subjects to be considered during "the week of prayer." The request has not yet been fully granted, but a union of purpose among the christian temperance people in this country has introduced the subject in different ways. On this year the Nat. W. C. T. U. called upon all its auxiliary organizations to observe Tuesday, the 9th of Jan. as an all-day of prayer, and to do what they could to urge all christian people to unite in remembering the cause of temperance. In accordance with this call the W. C. T. U. invited all who were interested to meet in their room yesterday in the morning. The president, Mrs. Stevens, opened the meeting by reading the 146th Psalm, known as the Crusade Psalm, and reviewed the wonderful uprising of the women in Ohio in Dec. 1873, and the succeeding events of this movement which has culminated in the great network of united womanly effort against the sin of drinking, selling and licensing. Miss Floyd took up the subject in her turn, and prayer, song, and strong passages of scripture were added to those which went before. Mrs. Cutler was the next leader and she read the 37th Psalm and commented on the same. Rev. Mr. Tilson and Mrs. Valentine of Salem added much of power and tenderness to the morning services.

At 2 o'clock Mrs. Huntington became the leader and for her hour the printed programme of the Nat. Union was used, and the same grand texts and stirring songs that thousands of women all over our land were using, became the seed of thought here. At three Mrs. Dr. Steele opened her Bible at the story of "Gideon and his band" and with marvellous power and in touching spirit made plain and significant to her hearers this thrilling narrative. In prayer she closed the hour, and then Miss Mary F. Eastman, well known as a woman suffragist, and accounted one of the finest woman orators in the country, spoke practically of women's work for her race. This closed a most successful and interesting meeting. Lunch was served, and most enjoyable social feeling was displayed. At the union meeting held in the evening in the Cong. vestry, "Intemperance as a Sin" was considered. Dr. Steele was the leader of the meeting and he startled and aroused his hearers when he related how he and the town missionary spent their afternoon in carrying the Gospel to sinners. Rev. Tilson and Sperry, Deacon Smith and others took part in the very effective meeting.

In connection with the semi-centennial at the Universalist Church to-day, the following in reference to the church organization is of interest:

On the 30th of April 1834, under the pastorate of Rev. John Moore, a church was organized with thirty-eight members; of these only three are thought to be now living; one of them, Miss Sally Poole, is still an attendant at church and communion service. One of the three is Mr. Lewis Allen, for some time an active member. On the 21st of Feb. 1840, he was chosen Clerk. The first communion service was holden at 5.30 P. M., June 22,1834, a number being present from the Universalist church, Salem. Rev. L. Willis and J. C. Newhall made addresses. During J. M. Austin's settlement, sixty-two members were added, of whom forty-five united in Feb., 1840, during the Knapp Revival; of these sixty-five the following are still members: Amos Merrill, William Very, Joseph W. Tutts, Martha F. Tutts, Fidelia Raddin. In the year 1842 the following resolutions were unanimously passed. "That the material which we have been in the habit of drinking at the communion table, usually called wine, be hereafter dispensed with, it being composed of materials entirely foreign from the juice of the grape. That for the present, water be substituted as a beverage at the communion table in place of the material referred to." During the pastorate of Rev. John Prince, successor of Mr. Austin, the church declined, and for some time no services were held in the house. Under succeeding pastors the society had varying fortunes until 1877, when Rev. E. W. Whitney by zealous effort established a new church organization. The first meeting was held May 6, 1877. The new church included seventeen heads of families and all but three of the Sunday School teachers. There were forty-one members, including six who were connected with the former organization. The Pastor is ex-officio head of the church, and the other officers are a clerk and two assistants to the Pastor. There are different committees to whom is entrusted special parts of the church work. The church is organized with the so called Winchester confession.

So. Peabody.—The carpenters have the outside finish nearly completed, on the new church.

Mr. J. C. Adams is to open a public house on the Harvey Galeucia place.

Joseph O. Peabody is reported sick, having had one or two bleeding spells.

Mr. Wm. Tudbury was installed as deacon of the church last Sunday.

Few more beautiful sights are presented to the eye of the lover of nature's wonders than that afforded by the planet Venus at its greatest brilliancy, in the clear air of a winter morning. The tiny speck which moved slowly across the sun's face four weeks ago has swung toward the west until it rises nearly two hours ahead, and blazes like a silver lamp, the queen of the starry host. To the far-seeing eye of the telescope, and even to the moderate power of smaller glasses, it discloses a delicate crescent, like that of the moon at two days old, but more lustrous by far. Its brightness is not entirely overpowered by the noonday sun, and for some weeks to come it may be readily found with the naked eye by an experienced observer, before two or three o'clock of any clear day. If the position of the sun at noon tomorrow is carefully noted, Venus may readily be detected in the same spot about half-past ten the following day.

There is an association connected with the Congregational church, having for its object charity, known as the Ladies' Social Circle. The ladies meet in the room on the right hand side on entering the vestry of their church. The room has been fitted up very neatly. The walls have been tinted and new blinds placed at the windows. The excellent taste of the ladies is shown in the selection of the furniture, among which is a new mirror, a nice cabinet organ, pretty table covers, carpet and other things to match. Meetings are held here weekly and a social circle is held monthly.

The Lynn and Boston Horse Railroad Company have petitioned the Selectmen for permission to extend their tracks to this town. They ask to lay the track along the south side of Lynnfield street to a point on Washington street this side of the Naumkeag house and then through the centre of Washington street to Main and beside the track of the Naumkeag street railroad company to the Square. The object in taking the centre of Washington street, is that it will interfere less with residents. The Selectmen will go over the route and a public hearing will be given before any action is taken.

The permanent debt of the county was reduced $13,000 last year, leaving it $141,000, of which $49,000 is due in 1883. There were paid out of the treasury for the support of the criminals and insane at Ipswich $22,700, which is an increase of $1,576 over 1831; for prisoners at Lawrence $22,684, which is $2,611 above last year; for Salem jail, $6,907, a decrease of 262; for Newburyport jail, $6,907, a decrease of $50. There was received into the treasury $13,000 from dog tax, an increase of $1,300 and for pedler's licenses $388, a decline of $100.

Sunday liquor selling is on the increase in certain localities. One liquor dealer who pretends to keep a hotel or boarding house, that he may not be taken unawares by the police, has established out posts and placed persons on guard at certain distances from his place, who watch the movements of the police on his beat, and whose argus eyes are always on the alert to discover the approach of the officers. On several occasions the police have endeavored to capture the place, but so well do the pickets do their duty, that they have been baffled.

At the annual meeting of the Peabody Mutual Benefit Association, held last evening, the secretary reported as follows: No. of Association meetings 1; No. of Executive meetings 14; No. of members elected during the term 71; No. suspended 11; No. died 4; No. of members now on roll 221. Received as admittance fees $71.00; received assessments and fees $843.00. Appropriations; postal cards and printing, $43.21; death benefits, $764.00. They voted to become incorporated.—Reporter.

In response to the alarm of fire at Danversport last Friday, the Torrent Hose Company of this town responded and attached to the first hydrant they came to but were unable to use it. They then attached to another hydrant. They were considerably surprised at the small force of the stream which was not above 21 lbs pressure when it should have been 90 lbs. After the fire it was learned there was a leak in the water pipe under the bridge and the water was running into the river.

Mr. Warren Wilson while riding in Danvers last Thursday afternoon was thrown from his team by the sudden jumping of a colt that he was driving. Mr. Wilson was unconscious when picked up and was cared for by the neighbors. He was considerably bruised about the shoulders, which are still lame.

Penalty for Sin.—Jan. 5, Wm. H. Howard and Albert C. Howard for assaulting their mother and grandmother, were fined $7.78, and not having the money are in Salem jail.

8th, John F. Dunnells, of Danvers, for being drunk, paid $5.85.

LONDON FIRE SERVICE.

Captain Eyre M. Shaw, Chief of the London Fire Department, now visiting in this country, gives a number of interesting facts with regard to the system and material for fire protection in use in London.

The area to be protected is one hundred and twenty-one square miles. The force employed numbers five hundred and thirty-six men and officers of all grades, one-third of the number doing duty by day, and two-thirds by night, each set working twelve hours. The equipment of the department comprises fifty-three land fire engines, one hundred and twenty-one fire escape engines, three floating steam fire engines, three large land fire engines, thirty-five small steam land fire engines, two steam tugs, four barges, twenty-nine hose carts, fifteen vans and two trollies.

The movable land stations are large vans that are taken to a designated spot every night at eight o'clock, each one drawn by four horses. The horses are then returned to the engine-house to which they belong. They are sent the next morning at eight o'clock to fetch the vans back. In each van is an engine and a number of men, who are always ready to attend a fire in the immediate neighborhood where the van is stationed. The department is forced to use these movable stations on account of the cost of building permanent stations. The engine does not leave its place, but depends upon its length of hose to reach a fire.

The system of telegraph alarms fifty-three telegraph lines with forty-four "call points" or alarm boxes, and seven telephone lines. The intention is to replace all the telegraph lines with telephone lines. The city is divided into four sections or fire districts, each with a central office, communicating with headquarters. The area covered is so great that a single system like that of New York would not answer.

Captain Shaw was greatly interested with the method employed in New York city of loosing the horses from their stalls by electricity on the sounding of an alarm, and the automatic harnessing. The London horses stand in their stalls harnessed. All the London firemen are given a two-months' course of instruction and systematic drilling before they are sent out for actual service. The department has discarded rubber hose entirely, and use "fabric hose," which is much lighter, costs one-third as much, and lasts three times as long. It is manufactured at Dundee.

A GLOOMY AND SIGHTLESS CEMETERY.

There had been a time when Cape Haytien boasted the proud title of "Little Paris," says a writer in the Paterson Press. Its charming climate, its unrivalled scenery, its prodigality of riches, its exhaustive sumptuousness, made it a marked and distinguished spot, an Elysirm, beloved and far-famed. But the evening of May 7, 1842, was a memorable date in the history of this fair garden. People were eating, drinking and making merry in their homes. No evil was dreamed of, no suspicion of calamity was entertained, no potentious sign warned them of their peril. Suddenly, like a thunderbolt from a clear sky, a terrific noise was heard; nature was in her convulsive throes; the foundations of the earth were stirred. Men started up with blanched faces, women shrieked and wept, children crouched down, paralyzed with fright. To escape was impossible. Already yawning gaps were seen in the massive walls. The heavy roofs fell in with a deafening crash, giant buildings tottered and fell, the air was filled with flying timbers and stones and sickening gases. Alas! The earthquake, so common in the West Indies, had visited this proud city. In a few minutes seven thousand persons with all their possessions were buried alive under tons of masonry. To us it was a sad and mournful spectacle. What a gloomy and sightless cemetery! There lay the uncoffined bones of the once rich and powerful and beautiful. No human hands had touched that monumental pile. Forty years have passed and to-day the eye of the tourist surveys the same awful desolation that once filled the whole city with crying and bitter lamentation.

ADULTERATION.

There was once four flies, and, as it happened, they were hungry one morning. The first settled upon a sausage of singularly appetizing appearance and made a hearty meal. But he speedily died of intestinal inflammation, for the sausage was adulterated with analine. The second fly breakfasted upon flour, and forthwith succumbed to contraction of the stomach, owing to the inordinate quantity of alum with which the flour had been adulterated. The third fly was slaking his thirst with the contents of the milk jug, when violent cramps suddenly convulsed his frame, and he soon gave up the ghost, a victim to chalk adulteration. Seeing this, the fourth fly, muttering to himself, "The sooner it's over the sooner to sleep," alighted upon a moistened sheet of paper, exhibiting the counterfeit presentiment of a death's head and the inscription "Fly Poison." Applying the tip of his proboscis to this device, the fourth fly drank to his heart's content, growing more vigorous and cheerful at every mouthful, although expectant of his end. But he did not die. On the contrary, he throve and waxed fat. You see, even the fly poison was adulterated.—German paper.

He who prays without confidence cannot hope that his prayers will be granted.—Fenelon.

Suffering is the surest way of making us true to ourselves.

Miscellaneous.

A DAY AND A NIGHT BETWEEN LIFE AND DEATH.

A short time since two schoolmasters from Morzine, a Savoyard village near the Swiss frontier, made an excursion to the Col de Coux, not far from Champery, in the Valais. As they were descending the mountain, late in the afternoon, they thought they heard cries of distress. After a long search they perceived a man holding on to a bush, or a small tree, which had stuck its roots into the face of the precipice. As the precipice was nearly perpendicular, and the man was some one thousand two hundred feet below them, and the foot of the precipice was quite as far below him, they found it impossible to give the poor fellow any help. All they could do was to tell him to stay where he was—if he could—until they came back, and hurry off to Morzine for help. Though it was night when they arrived thither, a dozen bold mountaineers, equipped with ropes, started forthwith for the rescue. After a walk of twelve miles, they reached the Col de la Golese, but it being impossible to scale the rocks in the dark they remained there until the sun rose. As soon as there was sufficient light they climbed by a roundabout path to the top of the precipice. The man was still hanging on to the bush. Three of the rescue pasty, fastened together with cords, were then lowered to a ledge about six hundred feet below. From this coin of vantage two of the three lowered the third to the bush. He found the man, who had been seated astride his precarious perch, a day and a night, between life and death. It was a wonder how he had been able to hold on so long, for beside suffering from hunger and cold, he had been hurt in the fall from the height above. He was a reserve man belonging to Samoens, on his way thither from Lausanne, where he had been working to be present at the muster. Losing his way on the mountains between Thonon and Samoens, he had missed his footing and rolled over the precipice. He had the presence of mind to cling to the bush, which broke his fall, but if the two schoolmasters had not heard his cries he must have perished miserably. Hoisting him to the top of the precipice was a difficult and perilous undertaking, but it was safely accomplished. None of the man's hurts were dangerous, and after a long rest and a hearty meal or two he was pronounced fit to continue his journey and report himself at the muster.

BRIC-A-BRAC.

I scoured the Nantucket curio shops, writes a correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, in company with a lady who was bent on having a frieze of plates around her dining-room walls, after the manner of a foreign Minister's wife, whose ceramic collection was the envy and despair of other Washington collectors. That search revealed all the curious characters in Nantucket, and from the shrewd and hard bargaining of the jolly and enthusiastic people who had plates to sell, we finally arrived at the doorway of a Quaker lady who is the most exquisite bit of bric-a-brac herself in the whole collection of humanity. We fairly jumped when the door opened and revealed that angelic picture to us, and when the brown-eyed lady with the white cap and 'kerchief and silver-gray gown said: "Won't thee come in?" we went dreamily and rather dazed. Anything more angelic, holy, and restful than that sweet Quaker countenance could not be imagined, and the old-fashioned sitting-room to which she led us was as peaceful and characteristic as everything about her. The most exquisite neatness was to be seen everywhere, the solid old mahogany furniture as polished and free from dust as when new, and the ticking of the clock chiming with the drowsy buzz of the bees and flies among the flowers outside the garden window. A room full of china rewarded our search, sent there by impoverished descendants of the old nabobs to be sold, and one would willingly run any extravagance for the pleasure of the half hour with the sweet Quaker lady in her peaceful home.

'PRENTICE WORK AT A BARBER'S.

A Vineland exchange says: A farmer's son took the place of one of our barber's apprentices while the latter was on his vacation recently, and as he was green in the business the head barber only allowed him to rub customers' heads and comb hair, besides brushing hats and clothes occasionally. A customer with a wig was turned over to the young man to put the finishing touches on, and not knowing that the gentleman in the chair wore a wig the greenhorn began to pour on the oil and rub vigorously. The irate customer felt his wig moving over his pate at the rate of forty knots an hour, got disgusted, and left the shop. The apprentice decided that as a barber he was not a success, and has returned to his former avocation—that of raising and shipping blackberries.

Good books fill the mind with noble and graceful images, and stand by us in all vicissitudes; they are comforters in sorrow, nurses in sickness, companions in solitude; old friends never seen with new faces; the same in wealth, in poverty, in glory and obscurity.

Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it minister grace unto the hearers; let all bitterness and wrath, and anger and clamor, and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice.

A STARTLING STATEMENT!

Corroborated by the Chief of Police.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1881.

DR. CHARLES CRAIG:—Dear Sir: Suffering as I have been for a long time with a fearful cold, that finally settled into what is termed quick consumption, and so pronounced by the attending physician, I heard of your Consumption Cure, and while having little faith in anything benefitting me, procured some of it, used it, and to day am, to the wonder of myself and friends, a well man.—I write this, as I feel in duty bound to do, for the benefit of suffering humanity, and can but hope that the thousands who are now suffering with that supposed incurable disease Consumption will try your Consumption Remedy. They will receive speedy relief and a permanent cure. You can send any one to me who cares to be advised as to the manner in which your medicines cured me.

P. H. SULLIVAN, Captain Police.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 14, 1882.

We, the undersigned, are personally acquainted with Captain P. H. Sullivan. We knew of his debilitated condition at one time, are knowing to the fact that he is now daily on duty, and are satisfied he would not make any statement that was not strictly true.

COMPOUND PEPSIN TONIC

Compound essence of pepsin. A remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion as shown in loss of appetite, nausea, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, water-brash, and a sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach. Dose, one tablespoonful (for adults) before meals.

Dyspepsia or indigestion is very prevalent in this country owing to habits of living—especially of eating and drinking. There is a disagreeable sensation in the stomach, although there may be no pain. When there is pain it is located in the breast, giving rise to fears of lung disease. There is a slight nausea; the mouth is clammy, or has a sour, bitter taste; the complexion is sallow, the bowels are costive, and there may be heartburn, water-brash, flatulence, palpitation of the heart (causing fear of heart disease), headache or double sight. The disease may be caused by either too much or too little exercise, too severe application of the mind, excessive emotion, intemperance in alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea or coffee, too warm and too rich food, ice water, excessive use of medicine, etc. For sale by LONGFELLOW'S FLOWER-DE-LUCE.—These Leaflets make a beautiful souvenir of Longfellow. The well known poem, "Flower-de-Luce," has been produced in fac-simile of Longfellow's handwriting, having been reproduced from the original draft. The poem contains one stanza never before published. The work is illustrated by six designs in colors by Mr. Isaac Sprague and the covers were designed by Mr. Lambert Hollis. The Leaflets are fastened together by white silk ribbon in a very tasty and entirely unique manner. Put up in heavy manilla envelope, ready for mailing, $1.25; with fringe, $1.50.

GOETHE'S WORKS. Cambridge edition.—This edition is printed on fine tinted paper, made for the work, in 10 vols., crown 8vo, and bound in black or green vellum cloth, gilt top, with Goethe's crest on the side, $15; half calf or half Turkey morocco, marble or gilt edges, $32. This edition is also furnished in red cloth, pasted title, and untrimmed, at the same price.

Peoples' edition. Printed from large type on good paper. Cloth, side and back stamp, 5 vols. Sold in sets only. In red, brown and gold, $7.50; half calf or Turkey morocco, $16.

A girl living in Greene county, Alabama, sixteen years old, is six feet six inches in height, weighs but sixty-eight pounds, and wears a No. 11 child's shoe.

A prolific State is Arkansas. Jesse Bunch, of Clark county, has twenty-three children, and Goodin Deaton, of the same county, twenty-one lively progeny.

The log cabin which Washington used as his headquarters when a surveyor in the valley of Virginia still stands intact over the spring at Soldiers' Rest, Clarke county.

A little girl at Galena, Ill., fell into a mine shaft sixty-five feet deep, and though unconscious when taken out, was found to have sustained no injuries other than a few scalp wounds.

Two gentlemen of Macon, Ga., caught some curious fish in the streams near that city. They varied in size, the largest being three feet in length, but were all shaped like a watermelon, translucent, bloodless and cold.

It isn't often that a couple is married in three languages, but at a wedding in Cleveland, Ohio, one day a short time ago, the Justice performed the ceremony in English and German, the bride responded in Bohemian, and the groom answered in German.

An observant man, who has been accustomed to sleep with the gas turned down low, was awakened twice, one night recently, by the gas going out. There appeared to be no cause, and, having relighted it, he lay awake for awhile cogitating. Presently he saw a large miller flutter about the flame, and, with a sudden plunge, extinguish it.

A steamboat agent at Salonica recently received a box of ordinary size and appearance for delivery in Constantinople. It was billed as a box of human heads, and actually contained the heads of nine robbers, captured by Turkish troops in Macedonia, the soldiery, in accordance with an old custom, having sent the heads to the capital to prove that the robbers had actually been captured and killed.

G. N. Boyer, a Carillon (Canada) tradesman, was going to bathe in the Ottawa one morning recently, and just as he entered the water a huge fish seized his foot. The water was reddened with blood, but with the assistance of bystanders the fish was made to let go. Mr. Boyer was with some difficulty able to go home. In the evening the monster was caught with a less interesting bait, and turned out to be a muscalonge weighing over forty-one pounds.

The ways of the Coreans are peculiar. Their great horror of and the precautions taken against the outer barbarian are in themselves a curiosity. They have a system of sentinels all around the coast, who report, by beacons of fire, to the capital the approach of any adventurous or unfortunate individuals—unfortunate from the fact very few Europeans land in Corea unless after going through the ordeal of shipwreck. But the last days of Corea's exclusiveness have arrived, and the opening up of the country to foreign intercourse is soon to be accomplished.

Eight clergymen preached simultaneously in the Eastern Penitentiary, Philadelphia, the other Sunday, to invisible audiences. This prison is conducted on the principle of solitary confinement. Each prisoner has his own lonely cell. These cells open on eight corridors, radiating from an octagonal centre. The preachers stood at the outer ends of the corridors, and could be heard by the occupants of the cells in their several sections. A group of officials and reporters in the middle of the prison experienced the novel sensation of listening to eight sermons at once.

THE PENN PENSION.

The hereditary pensions to the heirs of the Duke of Schomberg, which Thackeray ridiculed in his ballad of the "Battle of Limerick," and amounting to £984, still appear in that portion of the list which may be termed a collection of "curiosities." The heirs and representatives of the founder of the Quaker City, Mr. Penn, still receive the pension of £4,000 per annum granted them by Parliament "forever." The Earl of Kinnoull receives a pension of £1,620 4s. on account of certain "4½ per cent. duties," in addition to a hereditary pension granted to one of his ancestors by King Charles II.—Chambers's Journal.

A word, a look, which at one time makes no impression, at another time wounds the heart, and like a shaft flying with the wind, pierces deep, which, with its own natural force, would scarce have reached the object aimed.

Every one must see daily instances of people who complain from a mere habit of complaining.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

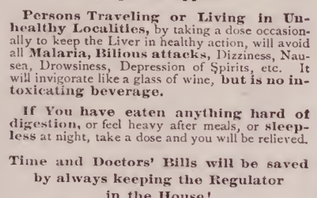
Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.



Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

The NEW YORK, 1883. Sun.

More people have read THE SUN during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read and like THE SUN for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs THE SUN makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whale as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The SUN has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the SUN is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

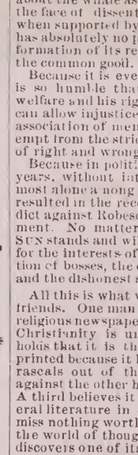
Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone a nong newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robesonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the SUN stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the SUN is the best religious newspaper ever published, because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor.—A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the SUN discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the SUN, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before.—If you do not already know the SUN, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of commonsense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

Terms to Mail Subscribers.

The several editions of THE SUN are sent by mail, postpaid, as follows:



DAILY—55 cents a month. $6.50 a year; with Sunday edition, $7.70.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—$1 year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues; an Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, market reports, and literary, scientific and domestic intelligence make THE WEEKLY SUN the newspaper for the farmer's household. To clubs of ten with $10, an extra copy free. Address

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummingt, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it"

J. E. Bruorton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March-1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. ITS REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

PEABODY.

The number of arrests for the month of December was thirty-one, for the following offences: Drunkenness, 20; assault, 4; common drunkards, 2; obstructing the sidewalk, 1; collecting old junk without a license, 1; vagrancy, 1; keeping liquor with intent to sell, 1; breaking and entering, 1.

The bargains offered by L. R. Power in his advertisement of to-day are specially for the people of this town. We advise our readers to bear this in mind, and also the fact that if they are not sold within two weeks this line of goods will be removed to the Marblehead store. An early call is desirable.

Rev. Dr. Steele and Miss Mary Floyd began yesterday to pay visits to the different liquor saloons in town and use their influence against the sale of intoxicating liquors. They visited the Hotel and offered prayers for the proprietor. They were received very politely at every place they visited.

J. Henry Osgood in a letter speaking of the manufacture of printers'composition rollers, composed mostly of glue and molasses, or honey, and used for inking type, says: "Stevens and myself are probably doing nine-tenths of the business in this line in the United States, and all this grew out of a little glue pot in Grosvenor's back shop."

Patrick Mulligan, who lives at a boarding house at the foot of Wallis street hill, is a morocco dresser and had some brushes used in that work in his room. During a temporary absence last Tuesday, his room was entered and the brushes stolen. On Wednesday he found the brushes in a pawn shop in Lynn, where they had been "put up" by a fellow boarder named Sullivan.

The National club has elected the following officers: President, Richard Kimball; vice-presidents, Ira Foster, James F. Sullivan; secretary, Edwin E. Rowell; treasurer, M. F. Sumner; financial secretary, H. J. G. Kimball; executive committee, Edward Trask, George F. Barnes, John J. O'Leary, Joseph H. Swett, Lewis E. Peabody.

The Geo. Peabody Council, A. O. U. W., have installed the following officers: P. M. W., D. F. Buxton; M. W., L. W. Cox; Foreman, G. A. Goldthwaite; Overseer, John McDonald; Recorder, Frank W. Carlton; Receiver, W. O. Southwick; Financier, F. N. Carlton; Guide, D. Bailey, Jr.; I. Watch, G. H. Low; O. Watch, A. F. Rowell; Trustees, John H. Tibbetts, A. F. Rowell.

Mr. Walter H. Wing, for a number of years employed in the PRESS office and for the past nine months acting as foreman, has left town to attend a course of study at Allen's Stenographic and Commercial school in Boston. We always found Mr. Wing honest and obliging, and wherever he goes he takes with him the best wishes of the PRESS for his prosperity.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the So. Danvers National Bank, held last evening at the bank room, Wm. P. Clark, Jonathan King, Alfred A. Abbott, Henry H. Proctor, Horace Bushby and Edgar W. Upton were elected directors. Mr. Wm. P. Clark was re-elected President, at the meeting of the Directors held subsequent to the meeting of the shareholders.

We would call attention to the card of Frank O. Baldwin, principal of the Lee Hall classical school, in another column. His school is located in Lynn, Mass., and Mr. Baldwin, who was formerly principal of the High School there has an enviable reputation as a teacher. Pupils are fitted for business, for Harvard, or School of Technology. Terms and circulars can be had by addressing him.

Our people will be pleased to know that H. B. Hooper will give a course of entertainments in Peabody, providing his first entertainment, which will appear here next Monday, with the celebrated Willie Edouin Company, is a success. Of this there can be little doubt, as our citizens know well the richness of the Company, coming with their own scenery and the Salem Cadet Orchestra of seven pieces.

The firemen's Relief Association has been organized with the following officers: President, D. S. Littlefield; Vice President, Wm. J. Roome; Secretary, John O. Buxton; Treasurer, Daniel B. Lord; Trustees, John A. Hart, Steamer 1; John H. Tibbetts, Steamer 2; Thomas O. Bartlett, H. & L. 1; J. B. Reith, Hose Co. 2; C. H. Hooper, Hose 3; H. J. G. Kimball, Hose 4; Lewis S. Peabody, Hose 5.

Mr. G. M. Towle delivered the lecture at the Peabody Institute last evening to a well filled hall. The subject was "Bismarck," whom he considered to be the greatest diplomat of the present century. He gave vivid descriptions of Bismarck's birthplace, his youth, his duels and escapades before he entered the political field, and held him up as a trickster and a tyrant, who would not stoop at any means to gain his ends, as an aristocrat and an enemy of the masses. The audience were well pleased with the lecture.

Mr. Alexander Miller, an employe for some time past of the Danvers Bleachery, reported at the Salem police station, last Wednesday afternoon that he had taken an overdose of chloral. Dr. Kittridge was called and after persistent walking for several hours he was pronounced out of danger. Friends in Peabody who had taken an interest in him were sent for, and gave directions as to his care. He is spoken of by his employers as a faithful and competent hand.

A musical entertainment will be given at the house of Mrs. J. B. Thomas, No 7 Oak St., Wednesday evening, Jan. 17. Songs of the ancient and modern time will be rendered, the former including selections from Father Kemp's music. Ice cream and cake will be offered for sale, the proceeds of which will be added to the fund for purchasing a piano for the Baptist Vestry. Should it be stormy Wednesday evening, the entertainment will take place Thursday eve. All are cordially invited to attend.

Word was received at the police station Saturday that Charles H. Chase, a well known character in Peabody had died at the County House at Ipswich. The police immediately notified his family. Mr. Chase when a young man did a very successful business in fish, but Chase himself was Chase's worst enemy, his appetite for liquor being almost a passion. During the Reynolds reform movement he signed the pledge time and time again, but so strong was the appetite that he broke it every time. He was serving a sentence for stealing potatoes when he died.

The week of prayer is being observed in this town as it is all over the country by the Evangelical churches. Union service was held at the Orthodox church last evening and tomorrow evening and there will be a Union service at the Baptist church and a similar service at the Methodist church Saturday evening. The subjects for the remainder of the week are: Thursday, Jan. 11,—Prayer for the church universal: Friday, Jan. 12,—Prayer for the nations: Saturday, Jan. 13,—Prayer for missions: Sunday, Jan. 14,—Sermons: "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." (Titus ii. 13.)

E. V. Emilio, as will be seen by his new advertisement, has moved into his new store under Mechanic Hall—formerly occupied by A. H. Taylor. He will keep organs, pianos, and all kinds of musical merchandise, new and second hand, at the lowest prices, either for cash or on instalments. He will also attend to orders for tuning, in which line he has no superior in this vicinity.

"Say who is she?" is the quaint title of a sacred quartet in excellent taste, just issued by Ditson & Co., and costs (35 cts.) They also send us, as specimens of their newest music, "By the old Garden Gate," (35cts.), Song and Chorus, by O. W. Lane. "Wild Flower Redowa," (35cts.) and "Garden Lily Mazurka," (35 cts.), easy and pretty pieces by E. Mack; a "Christmas Carol," (40 cts.) by Cirillo, the "Cute Polka," (40 cts.), by Mollie Hamilton, "Pretty as a Picture," (40 cts.), "Full of Joy Galop," (40 cts.) and "Ever near," (40 cts.) three very neat arrangements belonging to a set called "Chiming Bells," by Charles Kinkel. Also, "Spring's Profusion," (30 cts.), a song by Robert Franz, which is worth all the rest, although too difficult for ordinary singers. Any piece mailed for the price above named.

Much has been said regarding the accidents on the New York and New England railroad of late. The official report shows that many exaggerated statements have been published. There were only four serious accidents last year; they occurred at Burnside, Hampton, Putnam and Franklin. Outside of these accidents the company has suffered little serious loss, and has been exceptionally free from accidents to passengers or employes. A number of minor accidents occurred, but were principally confined to freight trains.

The January number of the Young Ladies' Journal has been received from the International News Company of New York. This excellent publication is produced simultaneously in England and America, and contains besides all the latest Paris fashions a large amount of information on subjects of interest to ladies, such as fancy work, knitting, embroidery, etc. The book is handsomely illustrated. In fact is just the magazine for the wife and family. Price 30 cents per copy. For sale by the Peabody News Company.

The "Congregationalist" is sending out to their patrons a finely illuminated calendar, with views of Pulpit Rock, Nahant, the lighthouse in Marblehead, view at Manchester-by-the-Sea, and Ipswich Bay. It is worthy of preservation.

A Letter From The West.

I recently took a stage ride of seventy-five miles over the mountains. We started in the keen frosty air of a November morning at an altitude of about 5000 feet above sea level. After bidding good bye to the courteous landlord who had seen me called at 3 o'clock, I got into my place, in the dark, and we started. At the next stop a good natured Dutchman crawled in with as many bundles as would have satisfied "the old woman who lived in a shoe." The next stop was for two ladies whose trunks were put on board the night before. While the driver was hallooing from his box, for his passengers, the Dutchman called out in pleading tones to know if he would not take some of his bundles "up there?" "No," was the sharp reply. "What will I do with them then?" "Nurse them," was the quick retort of the driver, little knowing and less caring that the poor Dutchman already had more than his lap full. Then followed a crack of the whip and away we whirled leaving the two lady passengers to follow their trunks, as best they might, the next day. I presume that frosty night air is not sufficiently conducive to the good humor of stage drivers to make them wait for ladies to dress for a journey. My first feeling, after regret for the ladies, was selfishness, for I could not see where we could have stowed them away in a coach already full. A few hours later, my selfishness gave way to curiosity. I would liked to have seen how they endured the journey, for our road proved to be one of the worst in the Rocky Mountains. After fifteen miles of jolting, and while it was yet dark, we stopped to change horses and for breakfast. The station is kept solely for the stage route, all alone by itself on the mountain park. We entered it to find as neatly kept, little log cabin as I ever remember to have seen, and to find, for "six bits," (75 cts.,) a good breakfast with such an appetite as only such a ride could produce.

Our driver was a second John, who thumped us over the stumps and stones until he snapped a two-inch thick steel tire on one of the wheels. He wired it round and drove on just as fast and little faster until we came to a blacksmith's shop. Coming to a steep canyon he would get down, chain the wheels, take a drink and away we would go. The chain was to help the horses down and the drink was to help the driver down, and it does help a good many of them down—way down.

This leads me to speak of the western habit of which is victuals and drink with many of the people. An old stage driver who was with us, as a passenger, found acquaintances at every stopping place where we left mail or exchanged horses. They all invited him to drink and he refused none. I kept count until I became tired of it and then I occupied myself with wondering how even an old stager could carry off so much of it.

It is a bad country for young men of dissipated habits or tendencies. Temptations to intemperance are much greater and more frequent here than in the East. The first man on the ground after a new mining camp is located, is quite sure to be the saloon keeper. He puts his shanty as near the mine as he can get it so as to accommodate the miners. The next man who builds his shanty for groceries and liquors puts it as near the first as he can for the same reason. Thus the buildings of the camp crowd each other down the gulches, along which the settlements are first located, without regard to order, giving to what may be the foundation of a future city an architectural deformity which it may require a long time to overcome, and a moral deformity which will not be eradicated in a much longer time.

I think the sanitary effects of alcoholic beverages in the high altitudes of the mining towns of this country are more fatal, even, than in the cities and towns on the Atlantic sea board. The result is—notwithstanding the usually healthy climate of this country—that the leanest towns have fat graveyards. Men live and die fast, here. I do not think the people here realize the enormity of this evil. A clergyman in Cheyenne, with whom I was conversing on this subject, the other day, admitted that the evil was great, but added (with that western enthusiasm which is acquired by a very short residence in this country) "it is a remarkable fact however that you seldom or never see a man drunk, here," forgetting that we came near running over drunken men three times, in an hours' ride about the city, that very afternoon.

The city of Helena is fully up to any city in the east, in its social and educational advantages and is blessed with nnmerous churches and faithful pastors, but drunken men are almost as common as sober. In returning home last night, at half past ten, at the first corner I turned, a drunken man was lying prone in the gutter, another, barely able to keep his balance, was swaying himself over his sleeping comrade, saying, as I passed, "a living corpse." It occurred to me as the most fitting term for such an object, I ever heard. There is many "a living corpse" here.

This, however, is the natural result of that predominating class of population which first settles all new countries and can be much more reasonably tolerated, in a country like this, than in intellectual and moral Massachusetts, when a party of great moral ideas has had the political domination for a quarter of a century, with one exception, and where that party, for at least ten of those years, has been responsible for the violation of its own license laws, and for the debauchery of its young men and women, in a legalized traffic that sends a man into his grave once in every ten minutes, in this country. In this place, the capital of a territory nearly twice as large as all New England, the temperance sentiment is rapidly rising, the cause is well advocated and the temperance orders not only embrace nearly every clergyman in their membership but also men of all professions, which is more than can be said of the capital of Massachusetts and the Athens of America.

L. L. WOOD.

Gov. Butler may be a great lawyer, but if he had consulted the Public Statutes of the commonwealth a little more freely and his prejudices less he might have been spared some egregious blunders. For instance, he says:—

At any rate, as the law now stands, any of these officers may commit any crime and be put into the state-prison for so doing,—and it is not unheard of that persons connected with the state government have committed crimes,—and still they cannot be removed from office.

Our laws and administration are not in quite so absurd a condition as this, as the following section of the Public Statutes shows:—

When a convict sentenced by any court of this state or of the United States to imprisonment in the state-prison, at the time of conviction and sentence holds an office under the constitution or laws of this state, such office shall be deemed to be vacated from the time of his sentence; and if the judgment against him is reversed upon writ of error, he shall be restored to his office with all its rights and emoluments, but if pardoned, he shall not by reason thereof be restored, unless it is expressly ordered by the terms of the pardon. —[Chapter 215, section 24.—Springfield Republican.

NEW YEAR'S GREETING OF 1883.

BROKEN LOTS.

At this time of the year, after the regular season's trade is over we have a large number of Overcoats, Suits and Pantaloons left, which are in broken lots and which we shall sell in many cases at less than the actual cost of the fabric from which they are manufactured. The reason of our selling these goods at such ridiculously low prices is because the sizes are not complete and consequently ought not to be carried over to next season.

In order to close these goods we have marked them at prices that will sell them, to the last garment.

REMEMBER! We may not be able to fit all, but those of you who can get fitted will get wonderful bargains. If you don't wish them for this winter, buy them for next. It will pay you.

We have not space to enumerate the articles, styles or prices, but ask you to come and see for yourself, and we are sure you will be repaid for your time and trouble.

ALL of our departments are included in this sale; if you are in need of anything that we have in any of our departments, be sure and give us a call.

N. B. Would call your special attention to a bargain lot of Winter driving vests, made from heavy winter overcoatings which we shall offer, to close, at $1.50, 2.00, 2.50 and $3.00.

The appearance of John McCullough at the Boston Theatre this week is good news to the admirers of that actor; he will appear in "Virginius," a play which has become so closely associated with his name that it would be impolitic for him to make his entree in any other part. Next week the "Gladiator" and others of Mr. McCullough's repertoire will be presented, and as his engagement is only for two weeks, the theatre will be filled at every representation. He will be supported by J. S. Haworth, formerly of the Museum Company, and an otherwise strong cast.

Full houses have greeted Mr. and Mrs. McKee Rankin at the Park theatre every evening, and this week is the last opportunity of witnessing their impersonations. Next week Gunter's great play of "Courage" will be produced. Rehearsals have been in progress for some time, and this week the company arrive in Boston for the final rehearsals with scenery and properties which its author will personally superintend. The preparations have been in progress nearly three months for the opening night. One of the heavy sets of scenery painted especially for the production ("Courage") has just been shipped from New York, where it was painted by Harley Merry and Phil Goatcher. It represents a plantation in the interior of Cuba, with the tobacco fields in blossom. In it the luxuriant vegetation of the Antilles is contrasted with the placid waters of a tropical lagoon, with its floating water lilies and aquatic plants. Those who have seen Mr. Schell's elaborate scene of the rocky cove by the bay of Santiago, with its gigantic tree ferns shading its waterfall, that trickles down over rocks covered with the exquisite flora of the West Indies, and washed by the lazy surf of the Carribean sea, say that it has never been excelled by any view seen in the Park Theatre.

One of the most celebrated of modern melo-dramas, Mr. Henry Pettitt's "Taken from Life," is to be presented to the attention of the Boston public this week at the Globe Theatre. The production of this much-litigated drama is to be given under Manager Samuel Colville's own direction and acted by the company specially engaged for the piece. The drama is to have a careful mounting, and all its exciting tableaux are to be adequately presented. It will hold the boards for two weeks.

The elegant electric chandelier originally designed and built for the Khedive of Egypt, and which fate threw in the hands of the management of the Bijou Theatre, has been put in position and is now illuminating the theatre.

The 100 "supers" to be employed in the revival of "Virginius" at the Boston have been rehearsing for several days past, under direction of Stage Manager Vance of the McCullough company.

Ada Dyas and company in "An Unequal Match" are reported as drawing good houses on the New England circuit. Next season, it is announced, Miss Dyas will become a member of one of the Madison Square Theatre companies.

On Monday evening last, some sixteen members of the Schubert Club and Oratorio Society gave a concert in the hall of the Danvers Insane Asylum, for the benefit of the inmates. Solos were rendered by Dr. Dudley and Misses Minnie Felt, Grace Dalton and Addie P. Pitman.

Moulton & Johnson will bring to Mechanic Hall on Friday evening the Madison Square Theatre Co. in the "Professor." This is one of the successes of that theatre, rendered famous by Hazel Kirke and Esmerelda. Its run at the home theatre was fully up to the other plays, and as it has never before appeared in Salem, we anticipate a full house. It is more humorous than either Hazel Kirke or Esmerelda, and those who enjoy a good laugh—and who does not—should be present.

Among the announcements of Moulton & Johnson for the coming month are: Jan. 23d, Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels; 26th, Callendar's Consolidated Minstrels; 29th, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence in the "Almighty Dollar; 30th, Thomas Keene.

Iolanthe, the new and light opera by Gilbert and Sullivan, was produced last Wednesday evening in Mechanic Hall, by Rice's opera company. This new opera is exceedingly quaint, and bubbles over with merriment and keen satire. It is the best of this kind of light operas. The construction is similar to that which has pervaded Gilbert's productions. The audience was thoroughly delighted with the presentation. The rich costumes, scenery and calcium effects were grand, the several parts were well taken, and the company was awarded several encores.

Uncle Josh Whitcomb received his friends in large numbers at Mechanic Hall, Salem, Monday evening. The character is just as real as ever, and the quaint witticisms of the old farmer and the pathetic scenes in which Tot, the street waif, appears, move the audience just as effectively to smiles or tears. The songs of Tot and Roundy, the bootblack, received a triple encore.

The reputation of Willie Edouin's Sparks Company in their charming entertainment of "Dreams" had preceded them and assured them the good house they received at the Institute last Monday evening. This piece of rollicking fun is on a par with the Vokes family and others of that character. The rousing fun and fine music by the Cadet Orchestra made it one of the best things of the kind this winter. Mr. H. Brooks Hooper, the manager, also announces for Friday evening Feb. 2, the engagement of Little Corinne, in the new musical comedy, "Bijou, or our Company."

The Democrats will some day wish that the opposition to the Civil-Service Reform Bill which expressed itself in the House of Representatives had not all come from the Democratic side, and that of those voting against the bill there had not been as many as forty Democrats to six Republicans and one Greenbacker, and that of those voting for the bill there had been more than 50 Democrats against 100 Republicans. In the Presidential canvass of 1884 they will feel the necessity of showing that they are, and always have been, as much in favor of civil-service reform as anybody or rather more so. These figures are disagreeable, but it is to be hoped that in the meantime they will lose no opportunity to strengthen their case.—Nation.

During the past week several New York and Boston capitalists have formed a company for the purpose of running several excursion boats in Boston harbor the coming summer. Three steamers, built especially for the purpose, will run exclusively between the Point of Pines and Boston. The palatial steamer Columbus will probably be seen for the first time in our waters, and will be used for ocean trips, and the steamers Grand Republic, Americus and one other will be run to other points.

The transfer steamer Maryland, owned jointly by the Consolidated, Pennsylvania and the New England railroads, which has been undergoing thorough repairs at Harlan & Hollingsworth's yard, Wilmington, Del., will again be ready for service about February 1. The boilers have been refitted, the engine improved and other repairs made at an outlay of about $30,000. The time for replacing the Washington express on the road has not been fixed.

It is a pleasure to receive letters from the advertising agent who periodically informs us that he will allow us to buy from him an organ, a saw, a lathe, a sewing machine, or some other article, if we will do a specified amount of advertising and pay him a small (?) balance in cash — said balance being about the full value of the article offered.—Milford Gazette.

The stock of butter in first hands in Boston, Jan. 1st, 1883, was 62,000 tubs, nearly twice as much as was expected, and 36,000 tubs more than was reported one year ago. This immense stock will have a tendency to lower the prices.

The concluding lecture of the Institute course was given last evening to a full house, by Wm. I. Marshall, upon the Yosemite valley. It was a very interesting and instructive lecture, and the illustrations were exceedingly fine. The lecturer is clear, easy and fluent, so that the evening was profitably filled. The big trees, the grand mountain scenery, specimens of the peculiar trees of the region, fine effects of frost and snow, scenes by moonlight, etc., were given in rapid but not too quick succession. We can cordially recommend Prof. Marshall as a very genial gentleman, a pleasing lecturer, with fascinating subjects well described and finely illustrated.

It is stated that during the past fifteen years the average number of stormy Sabbaths, or in which there has been foul weather, has been 16 3-4. The year 1882 gave 24 such Sabbaths, a number unprecedented in fifteen years. Some say if it storms on the first Sabbath in the month it will storm on every subsequent Sabbath; this has only occurred in August of 1878, March of 1880, June of 1882.

Original Poetry.

Liebe Nicht.

BY CHARLOTTE E. RICKER.

Love not any!
Love has ta'en the life of many;
Love not any!

Some love too little:
A dangerous thing,
It keeps them always
On the wing,
They pause to sip
From every lip.
Behold the diary of one,
Thermometer in the sun,
" Forty—met her on the street,
Prettier girl you ne'er will meet.
Fifty—saw her at a hop;
Dance? She dances like a top.
Sixty—held her hand a minute!
Happy man who hopes to win it.
Seventy—strapped her little skate,
Number two as sure as fate;
Heart was beating
Like a drum at martial meeting.
Eighty—sunny hair! lovely face!
Queenly gait! perfect grace!
Rides and walks,
Delightful talks.
Ninety—burdensome sighs,
Communion of eyes,
Delicious unquiet,
Rose-leaves for diet;
Hundred—can I ever doubt her?
What to me were life without her?
Rainbows everywhere,
In sky, in sea, on earth, in air."
Thou venturesome pen, from this degree
The temperature's unknown,
None can rise higher, unless inured
To the heat of the tropic zone.

Soon the sun crosses the line,
The noon-day glories fade,
Thermometer runs down,
'Till, in the shade,
Ninety—relapse from sighing,
Eighty—old love denying,
Seventy—new love implying,
Sixty—some dangerous lying,
Fifty—no farther thought of pleasing;
From forty quickly runs to freezing.
Alas! alas! this conquering Nero
Reaches at last the state of zero.
But Oh! his heart's o'erflowing Nile
Pours out to other shores meanwhile,
And goes again through various stages
That fickle lives have known for ages.
Fie, Cupid! Love like this is treason!
Do butterflies survive the season?

Love not any!
Love has ta'en the life of many;
Love not any!

Some love too much!
Their idols turn to clay,
Crumble away
To premature decay;
Some love too much!
Among the great unknown
Their dust is sown,
And by the wild winds blown
'Neath heedless feet;
Perchance from roses sweet
Still comes their breath
From the pale world of death,
To perfume life for those
For whom they sought repose;
No voice have they our ears can hear!
But ah! methinks they still are near.
Some love too much!
God pity such!

Love not any!
Love has ta'en the life of many;
Love not any!

Slander.

'Twas but a breath—
And yet a fair, good name was wilted;
And friend once fond grew cold and stilted,
And life was worse than death.

One venomed word,
That struck its coward, poisoned blow,
In craven whispers, hushed and low—
And yet the wide world heard.

'Twas but one whisper,—one,
That muttered low, for very shame,
The thing the slanderer dare not name—
And yet its work was done.

A hint, so slight,
And yet so mighty in its power,
A human soul, in one short hour,
Lies crushed beneath its blight!

Selected Story.

The Barrington Toll-Gate.

Jenny Bartlett's father and mother had been called away for the night to Parnasus Centre, where Mrs. Bartlett's sister had been taken very ill, and Jenny was left to keep the toll-gate alone. It was not a difficult task, for scarcely any one travelled over the Burlington road after nine o'clock, and those who did passed through the gate without paying toll.

But even if it had been harder Jenny would have been equal to it. She had lived at the toll-gate ever since she was a baby, and knew very well what to charge, and how to make proper change. Indeed, she often kept the gate for her father when he was at home, and people passing through would be apt to wonder how so bright and pretty a girl could grow up in so lonesome a place. Jenny, however, did not mind the lonesomeness. Her dearest wish was to go off to boarding-school; but so long as she was at home it mattered little to her that Burlington was three miles off on the one hand, and Leicester ten miles on the other, and that there was scarcely a house between. She even liked the solitude, and was almost sorry when the telephone connecting Barrington with Leicester made a connection by the way of the toll-gate. Before, they seemed to be out of the world, and the people coming through the gate were like visitors from another sphere; now, the frequent ringing of the call-bell reminded her that civilization was not so very distant, after all. On this particular night, there was not likely to be even the usual number of passers-by. It was dark and threatening. Looking out of the door about nine o'clock, Jenny could hardly see more than a hundred feet either up or down the road. It would be a bad night, she thought, for the gate to get accidentally shut; anybody coming along might run into it without warning; for that matter, people might run into the posts on either side. She hung a lantern on one post, to prevent this accident, and, going into the house, locked the door and went to bed. The fact that she was alone in the house, did not disturb her in the least, and in a minute she was fast asleep.

Sometime in the night, she was suddenly awakened by the ringing of the telephone-bell. She listened confusedly, to hear if it rang three times, which was the toll-gate signal, or oftener, to call up some of the other people on the same wire. Two of the connections she knew were Leicester, the third was their own, the fourth was in the Barrington bank, the fifth in the tannery, and the sixth in the central-office at Barrington. In her bewilderment, Jenny could not at first determine how many times it did ring; but at last she decided it was six—for the Barrington central-office. That did not mean the toll-gate, and Jenny prepared to turn over for another nap, when a sudden thought aroused her. It was certainly after midnight, and the central-office did not keep open later than 12 o'clock. The bank, too, was shut up, and so was the tannery; on the whole she was probably the only person who could hear the bell. What if it should be something important? Indeed, it would hardly ring at that time of night unless it was important. Quickly jumping out of bed, she ran to the instrument, put the receiver to her ear and called through the transmitter, "Hello! hello!"

A voice came back to her so distinct, that it seemed almost in the same room, saying, 'Hello! is that the central-office?' The tone was quick and sharp, and Jenny felt sure that something must have happened.

'No, sir,' she called, 'it's the toll-gate. I'm Jenny Bartlett.'

'Tell your father to come here right away,' the voice said; 'it's very important.'

Jenny felt a little sinking at her heart. 'Father's away,' she said: and I'm here alone.'

She heard them exclaim something in an impatient tone, and then the sound of two or three other people talking, as though there was some doubt as to what could be done.

'Can I do anything,' she enquired, almost hoping that she could not.

Another conversation followed, which Jenny overheard; the speakers were no doubt nearer the telephone.

'Why do you want to let them go into Barrington at all,' one voice asked. 'Why not let them stop at the toll-gate?'

'To be sure!' said another. 'If any get past the gate, like as not they'll turn down the Riverton road, and throw Allen off the track. They can't turn off before they get to the gate; we are sure of them as far as that.'

'Tell the girl—' and then the speaker turned away, and Jenny caught only a confusion of sounds.

Presently she heard another 'Hello!'

'Hello!' she responded.

'The Leicester Bank has been robbed,' the voice went on hurriedly, 'by two men with a wagon and a white horse. They have driven toward Barrington, with Mr. Allen and two constables in pursuit, half an hour behind. You must—'

Here the voice stopped suddenly and completely, as though it had had an extinguisher put over it. Even the hum of the electricity was cut off. It was in vain that she rang the bell and called out, 'Hello!' No one answered. Jenny felt once more the old sense that she was out of the world. Leicester seemed all at once hundreds of miles away.

But what was it she must or must not do? When were the robbers expected? Jenny had made a little calculation. If they had been gone thirty minutes before any one had started in pursuit, that would carry them, by fast driving, half-way to the toll-gate. If ten minutes had gone by before the telephone-bell had rung, she might look for them within half an hour. What was she to do? The conversation which she had heard came to her mind. 'Stop them at the toll-gate,' one of the voices had said. Very likely they would have told her to do that, if the telephone had kept on. But how could a little girl arrest two armed and desperate men?

By this time she began to feel chilly. She could not go back to bed with this responsibility upon her, even though she did not know how to meet it; so, dressing herself, she opened the door and looked and listened. The night was darker than ever. A little space around the gate was lit up by the warning lantern. It would not help in stopping the burglars, she suddenly thought, to illuminate their way; so, going over to the light, she blew it out and left the road in total darkness. This was at least one step toward the desired end.

All at once she thought of the gate. 'How stupid!' she said to herself. 'Why didn't I think of that before?' It was fastened back against the front of the house, but in a moment she had unhooked it and swung it round until it stretched completely across the road. There was only a latch on the gate, but, going into the house she brought out of one place a padlock and from another a chain, with which she fastened it so securely that no ordinary strength could force it open. 'They can't get through that,' she said to herself, 'and there isn't any way of getting around it.' Then she went in the house, locked and bolted the door, rolled a bureau up against it, fastened all the windows, pulled down the shades and waited in the dark for the sound of wheels.

It was not long before they came, but to Jenny every minute seemed an hour, while every rustling leaf outside sounded like a man's stealthy tread. When at last she heard them coming far up the road, her heart stood still. Nearer and nearer they came. Would they not see the gate, she wondered. The horse still kept on; and instantly there was a sudden exclamation outside, a crash as though something had come into collision with the gate, the sound of splintering wood, and the noise of a plunging horse. Jenny did not venture to move; she dared not go to the window, but sat in the middle of the room, shrinking with fear and listening for what might happen next. Presently steps sounded on the planks outside, and in a moment there was a rap on the door.

Jenny remained perfectly quiet, though her heart beat so loud that she thought they must hear outside, and in a moment the knocking ceased.

'Folks asleep,' she could hear one of the men say.

'Asleep, or dead, or run away,' the other one growled.

'Shall we try the window?'

Jenny trembled all over, but the sash held firm.

'Oh, come on!' exclaimed his companion. 'Don't let's waste time; we can splice the shafts with the halter.'

They moved off again, and Jenny breathed more freely. If the shafts were broken, it would be the work of some minutes to mend them, and the pursuing party might arrive in time. Mr. Allen, whom Jenny knew to be president of the Leicester bank, had the fastest horse in the county, and ought to be able to make up at least ten minutes in ten miles. For a while there was quiet outside. The men were evidently working at the shafts, and only the stamping of the horse's feet gave signs of life. Jenny began to get nervous, and to listen more intently for the pursuers' approach. By this time they could not be far off. Finally, unable to sit still any longer, she crept up-stairs, and sitting down by the open window of the attic, ventured to look out. The white horse was quite distinctly visible, as it stood by the gate, but the men bending over the wagon were hardly more than an outline. Presently, they seemed to have finished, and backing the horse around, proceeded to hitch him in the shafts. Would the others never come? The gate was not yet opened, but Jenny began to fear that the burglars would not find that a serious difficulty. Suddenly through the woods came the sound of horses' hoofs galloping as if for life. Do the men hear it, too?

Apparently they did.

'Open the gate,' she heard one of them say.

His companion went to it, and vainly tried to pull it open. 'It's padlocked,' he exclaimed, after a minute.

The other cried. 'Pick it! They've put-up a job on us here I knew we didn't cut the wire quick enough.'

It was a minute before the burglars' skill could pick the lock, and by that time the pursuing wagon was dangerously near.

'Open the gate,' shouted the first man, pulling back his horse to escape its sweep. The other pushed and the great bar swung slowly back. But before it had opened wide enough to let them through, the other wagon had dashed upon the scene.

'Stand where you are,' Jenny heard Mr. Allen's voice call out, 'or I'll shoot you down!'

What immediately followed Jenny did not see, for, leaving the window she rushed down-stairs, lit the lantern, rolled back the bureau, unlocked the door, and went out. When she had gained the road, the two burglars, captured and tied, were being guarded by the constables, while Mr. Allen was investigating the contents of the wagon, and making sure, as far as he could in the darkness, that all was right. At Jenny's approach he looked up.

'Ah!' he said. 'Are you the toll-keeper's daughter? Just ask your father to step out here, won't you?'

Jenny smiled. 'Father isn't at home, sir,' she said.

'Oh, well, your mother, then, or any one who keeps the gate.'

'Mother isn't at home, either, sir; I am keeping the gate.'

The gentlemen looked at her in surprise.

'You!' he exclaimed. 'What made these fellows stop here?'

'They broke their wagon, sir.'

'How did they happen to do that?'

'The horse ran into the gate, sir.'

'Was the gate shut?'

'Yes, sir.'

'You don't usually shut the gate nights?'

'No, sir; but I did to-night.'

He looked at her for a further explanation, and Jenny, who never liked to tell of her own exploits, was obliged to go on.

'They telephoned me about it from Leicester, sir,' she said, briefly.

'Did they tell you to shut the gate?'

'No, sir; the telephone stopped before they got so far as that; these men cut the wire, and I had to think for myself what I should do.'

'And you thought of that,' he asked.

'Yes, sir,' she said, modestly.

'Well,' he said, 'you are a thoughtful little girl. You saved me a great deal of money, to-night, and I'll never forget it.'

And he never did. The directors of the bank passed a vote of thanks, at their next meeting, to Miss Jenny Bartlett 'for her prompt and efficient services in arresting the burglars who feloniously entered the bank-building on the evening of September—, and abstracted the valuable contents of its vaults;' and more than that, sent her a purse of money, with which she was able that winter to carry out her long-cherished plan of going to school. It was a disagreeable experience to go through, but Jenny will always date whatever success she has in the world from that night at the Barrington toll-gate.—Harper's Young People.

Book Notices.

The February number of the North American Review is to contain an article on "The Experiment of Universal Suffrage," by Prof. Alexander Winchell; a discussion of "The Revision of Creeds," by clergymen representing six evangelical denominations: a paper entitled "The Decay of Protestantism," by Bishop McQuaid; and a defense of the Standard Oil monopoly, by Senator Camden.

The initial number for 1883 of THE ART INTERCHANGE contains an extra supplement in the shape of a handsome Calendar, decorated with a set of tiles, six of which are given in size in the regular supplement. Etching, now becoming so fashionable, receives due attention in a careful discussion of Seymour Haden and his critic, and Hawthorne's posthumous novel, "Doctor Grimshaw," is brightly reviewed. Artisans will be interested in the fragments of ornaments for the use of cabinet makers, which, with the fresh and interesting Notes and Queries Department, complete this initial number. Sample copy free for postage. $2.00 a year, 26 Numbers. 140 Nassau street, New York.

ST. NICHOLAS for January contains several notable features, preeminent among which is the brief biographical sketch of Elizabeth Thompson Butler, written by her sister, which is accompanied by six illustrations from drawings made by the celebrated artist herself especially for ST. NICHOLAS. Another very interesting article is that by H. H., entitled "A Chinese New Year's Day in Santa Barbara," which gives a vivid account of this strange Mongolian celebration in an American town. Some further adventure of "Tinkey," in a story, entitled "Fairy Wishes, Nowadays,' with characteristic illustrations, is sure to be welcomed by his old, and equally enjoyed by his new friends. J. T. Trowbridge's serial leaves the "Tinkham Brothers" in an exciting situation, where they must stay until the Feb. number. "The Cloth of Gold" has five illustrations by M. Oudinot of Paris, from the stained-glass windows designed by him for the house of Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt of New York. In addition, is the usual amount of short stories, verses, bright pictures, and departments. The frontispiece is a beautiful picture by E. H. Blashfield, called "His Lordship's Bed-time."

Messrs. W. H. Thompson & Co., of Boston, Mass. (as per advertisement in another column) have in press and will soon issue a new book entitled "Miss Richards' Boy" from the pen of the popular author, Josiah Allen's wife, who has heretofore so pleased the public with her spicy books "My Opinions and Betsey Bobbet's" "Samantha at the Centennial," and "My Wayward Pardner," over which many a hearty laugh has been had. This new volume differs in many respects from her previous works, and promises to surpass them all. It will contain a fine portrait of the author, who will satisfy the curiosity of many who have often wished to know just how Josiah Allen's wife looks. The book will be sold only by subscription, and agents are wanted in every township. Here is a rare chance for some of our many wide awake lady and gentleman readers to take hold of a paying book.

Now is the time to subscribe for the YANKEE BLADE. The cheapest and best family story paper in America, $2 per year. See advertisement.

"A look into Hawthorne's Workshop" is a most remarkable feature of the January CENTURY, when we consider that the paper consists of the most interesting portions of Nathaniel Hawthorne's own posthumous notes for a romance. Professor Wallace, the noted English scientist and author of "Island Life," contributes an important estimate of "The Science to Darwin," which interprets the theories of Darwin, and says the only name with which his can be compared, in the domain of science, is that of Newton. George W. Cable begins in this number his illustrated historical studies of Old New Orleans, by answering the much-asked question "Who are the Creoles?" Dr. Eggleston's second paper on colonial history is well illustrated. "The Planting of New England" is the striking title, and the Puritans are treated with keen insight and sympathy. The January chapters of Mary Hallock Foote's romance of the silver mines, "The Led-Horse Claim," introduce a tragedy underground, and develop a powerful interest. The story will be finished in two more parts. The third part of Dr. Gladden's practical story of "The Christian League of Connecticut" mentions the fact that the laws of many States virtually forbid the union of Christian churches. Mrs. Burnett's "Through One Administration" is continued. The poems of the number are by Paul H. Hayne, H. C. Bunner, Frances Hodgson Burnet, Edith M. Thomas, Henry Ames Blood, E. C. White, and Maria W. Jones; and among verses of lighter vein in "Bric-a-Brac," are two of Uncle Remus's Christmas Dance Songs. The other editorial departments are unusually full and interesting. Among the book-notices is one of Mr. Howell's "A Modern Instance."

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at Spaulding's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

TRAINED SEALS.

They are exhibited in the largest tank at the Aquarium, which was constructed for the white whale, and has been recently devoted to the exposition of the natatorial powers of Miss Annie Beckwith. At one end a small tent has been erected on a platform raised a couple of inches above the water. From the upper surface of this the seals can glide into the fluid or return at will. Their first performance was a violent tugging at two bell pulls, to give notice to the visitors. The bells were in hideous discord, and the noise was continued far too long for the comfort of the audience. The bells removed, the animals took, at the command of their keeper, their stations on two inclined boards, which raised their heads and fore limbs above the general surface of the platform. To one hand-like forefoot of the male was attached a cymbal, with which it struck another conveniently placed in front, while the female was playing a tambourine by striking it with very great rapidity. The musical discord was varied by the keeper holding a banjo to the smaller performer, who evoked hideous sounds by rapidly scraping across the strings with her nails. This done, the audience were informed that the animals were about to indulge in smoking. Short pipes, about six inches long, were placed in their mouths, from the bowls of which issued flames one or two inches high. On my first visit both animals held these flaming pipes in their mouths, but on my second the male declined, having been alarmed by the too near approach of the flame to his face. Various articles, as baskets, logs of wood, &c., were then thrown into the water, and were quickly and easily retrieved and brought to the keeper's hand by both the animals. The next performance consisted in both the animals climbing up, by the aid of their fore limbs, a ladder rising from the surface of the water, at an angle of about forty-five degrees. After diving into the water from the top of the ladder the animals shot themselves by the impetus of their rapid motion on to the platform, and seizing a couple of short cords attached to revolvers, fired a rapid succession of shots. The performance concluded by a remarkable exposition of the strength possessed by those animals when in the water. A small boat capable of holding three children, whose united weights must have been about eight or nine stone, was dragged very rapidly around the tank by the two seals in succession. A small collar was placed over the head, to which traces were attached that were secured to the boat. The strength displayed by the seals was remarkable; the little boat, pulled by the muscular strength of one animal, threw off the water from its bows as if it had been propelled by a vigorous sculler. The exhibition was to me of a peculiarly interesting character. The animals manifested a great degree of intelligence and docility, in keeping with their high cerebral development. Nevertheless, they have their peculiar mental idiosyncrasies. One of their characteristics is extreme susceptibility to alarm; the slightest alteration or fright will throw them out of work, and it is difficult to reassure them. Their training was effected by a system of rewards, without any punishment, and the visitors may notice a piece of fish dropped into the mouth of each after the performance of every trick. The amount of fish devoured by these two animals is about three hundred pounds per diem. The oleaginous Clupeidæ, herrings, pilchards, &c., are preferred; but, failing these, whitings, haddocks, &c., are given, these being carefully cut open to insure the absence of any fish-hooks, which have repeatedly caused the death of captive seals, and possibly of wild ones also.—The London Field.

A STEAM TRICYCLE.

A Buffalo man has perfected an important invention which is nothing less than a steam tricycle. It is expected that it is destined to revolutionize the modes of travel on the highway. It at first sight resembles a low, open buggy or buckboard. The seat is placed between the two principal wheels, the third wheel being in front, about five feet away from the others. It is smaller, and is used for guiding the vehicle. The two main wheels are the same as those used in bicycles. The motive power is applied to them by means of a small spur wheel and a few feet of belting or chain. The engine and boiler are located between the seat and the forward wheel. They take up very little space, and much of the machinery will be inclosed in a wooden case when the vehicle is complete. The engine is one and a half horse power, and it rests on the bottom of the conveyance. The exhaust is underneath, and will be nearly noiseless and invisible. The cylinder is two by four inches. The generator is upright and stands directly over the neat little boiler. For fuel gasoline is used, and two gallons of this fluid, surrounded by water, will be carried in a reservoir under the seat. It will be conveyed to the furnace by means of tubes. It is claimed that one gallon will be sufficient to run the engine for nine hours at the rate of from fifteen to twenty miles an hour. The tricycle as it now stands cost about two hundred dollars, but but it can be duplicated for one hundred and fifty dollars.—Boston Globe.

Particular attention will diclose heavenliness in the commonest affairs of life. There are "sermons in stones" and there is good in everything for those who will yield a devout attention.

The secret of success is to know how to deny yourself.

LINCOLN READS A POEM.

Honest Old Abe Entertains his Cabinet with a Little Quotation.

"Now, gentlemen, you all have more or less poetry in your souls; listen to this," and Abraham Lincoln, then President, rose from his chair, in his office in the White House, and read, in trembling tones, which indicated his own profound appreciation of it, Dr. O. W. Holmes' "Last Leaf," of which the following are two verses:

"They say that in his prime.
Ere the pruning knife of time
Cut him down;
Not a better man was found
By the crier in his round
Through the town.

Now the mossy marbles rest
On the lips that he had pressed
In their bloom;
And the names he loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb."

Mr. Michael Guilfoyle, of Binghamton, N. Y., is not as old as the venerable Boston citizen of whom the poet wrote with such tender pathos, yet he is more than three score and ten. "For the past eight of those years," he writes, "I have been a perfect cripple from rheumatism, hobbling about as best I could with my cane. I took PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and am now supple and strong as a gymnast. There is no trace of the disease left about me."

Mr. R. W. Mosher, wholesale druggist, of Binghamton, writes Messrs. HISCOX & Co., of New York—Proprietors of the Tonic—certifying to Mr. Guilfoyle's declaration.

Having all the properties of any preparation of ginger, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is a remedy of infinitely greater range and power. It cures all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood or imperfect digestion. Dyspepsia (and all its consequences), Malarial Fevers, Sick Headache, Kidney troubles, Bronchitis, and common Coughs and Colds, vanish at its touch. Prices. 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Larger size the cheaper.

"THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF HENRY WARD BEECHER."—W. H. Thompson & Co. of Boston announces the publication of a book under the above title containing not only an analysis of the remarkable pulpit and other abilities of this eminent preacher, but giving in word portraiture as nearly as possible a true idea of his traits and powers drawn by those who agree and those who differ with him; edited by Lyman Abbott, D. D. and assisted by a corps of the best known writers and thinkers in America. The aim of the book, which is richly illustrated, is to present Mr. Beecher as he is, neither praising nor blaming him beyond reason, while it will be found replete with incidents and reminiscences, such as his life only can furnish. This book is sold only by subscription. See advertisement in another column.

We are in receipt of part 21 of "Something to Read," published in this country by the International News Co., of New York. A new serial story is commenced in this number, and there are also four complete long stories, So Courteously Cruel, With the Stream, Winifred, and Apple Blossoms. The price is only 25 cts. Call for it at the Peabody News Co., who have them for sale.

We are in receipt of the Baltimore Sun Almanac which contains in addition to the usual valuable information, a chronological table of the events of the last year. It is a book of 84 pages.

No more the wildwood cheers our eyes
With eglantine and aster.
No more the kine do kick the flies
That tease them in the pastur'.
No more are rural maids employed
In mashes with the "utter,"
But well they fill the aching void
With buckwheat cakes and butter.

Unity of action, concord, sympathy and goodfellowship are admirable traits in human character; but they will not heal our physical infirmities. Catarrh, for example, stubbornly resists their effects or influence. In fact this malady withstands all of its would-be destroyers, except Ely's Cream Balm. "Solitary and alone" this Balm stands as the only recognized and infallible specific for catarrh. "For fifteen years," says J. B. Chase, St. Denis Hotel, B'way and 11th St., N. Y., "I have been greatly annoyed with a disgusting catarrh. My sense of smell, not to mention other troubles, became much impaired. A thorough use of Ely's Cream Balm has cured me of these troubles." It is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. Only 50 cents a package.

Tomorrow's fate, though thou be wise,
Thou canst not tell, nor yet surmise;
Pass, therefore, not today in vain,
For it will never come again.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

Over the snow we'll glide,
The bells they jingle, jingle,
With our best girl by our side,
And our ears, they tingle, tingle.

THE TALL SYCAMORE OF THE WABASH.—The special correspondent of the Indianapolis (Ind.) Journal, embodied in a recent communication the following from Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees: I consider St. Jacobs Oil a splendid remedy. I suffered from an affection of the back and kidneys, with some rheumatism—in fact, it was rheumatism of the back. I used St. Jacobs Oil, and found it very efficacious. It gave me instantaneous relief, and finally cured me completely.

Beautiful eyes are those that show
Beautiful thoughts that burn below;
Beautiful lips are those whose words
Leap from the heart like song of birds;
Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest and brave and true,
Moment by moment, the whole day through.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

THERE HAVE BEEN attempts made by philanthropic people in different parts of the country to establish coffee rooms, as an antidote, or we might more properly say a counter attraction for young men who are in the habit of frequenting liquor saloons. The principle is worthy of great praise; the young men in our large cities and even in smaller towns, as is known to everyone, go to the saloon from the want of a better place. And many older men, from lack of pleasant home surroundings, are led in the same direction. But we cannot say that the experiment has proved much of a success. Were the attractions greater, there might be more hope of inducing the youth to depart from the danger to which they are subjected in the other direction. In the city of Boston, in the heart of the liquor saloons, there are two very pretentious coffee rooms; one of these is on Washington street, above Kneeland, and the other on Green street, near the Revere House. Both are magnificently furnished, provided with papers and other reading matter, and in outside attraction equal to the gilded saloons which are numerous in the vicinity. In the Washington street coffee room, there are given light entertainments from time to time, to which all are welcome.

We are earnestly in favor of these and all other efforts, in a moral direction, calculated to neutralize the wiles of the liquor seller. Innocent amusements, home enjoyments, free from the temptation of the intoxicating cup—all have their influence. This influence can be made a mighty power in many cases, and it is to be regretted that in the political atmosphere to which the temperance agitation has been dragged, the moral influence of such counter attractions has been comparatively lost sight of. We regard the new life which has been infused into our Exchange News Room an important aid in the direction. The games of billiards and pool are patronized largely by our young men; in most, if not all cases, besides the expense of the game, is added the temptation of intoxicating liquors. They would not pay, without the sale of drink. Here the members are free from this temptation; and it should be said that large numbers of our youth are patronizing the games there, by becoming members, who would go elsewhere for this amusement, and if they did yield to the temptations in other places, it is no more than could reasonably be expected. For this and other reasons, we say this News Room is worthy of the support, and approval of our best people, in that it has provided an attractive place for an evening's enjoyment, free from the wine cup and its influences.

IT IS NOTICEABLE in the long message of Gen. Butler that no mention is made of the question which has caused so much political disturbance, and concerning which there has been much anxiety as to his opinion,—we mean the liquor question. It is true, he once said he would enforce a prohibitory law, if elected. But then his political affiliations were with the Republicans. Now he is silent. Does he consider this mooted question unworthy of consideration? This must be annoying at any rate to his supporters, who number both those who are in favor of liquor selling and those who wanted a prohibitory law. He cannot please both. And if he thinks to avoid the issue by silence, he has surely reckoned without his lost. The members of the prohibitory party are not large in numbers, but they are terribly persistent, and they will not be content to allow him the privilege of a non-committal. With the well known views of his party on the subject, his silence is amusing, to say the least.

THE LESSON of the great fire in Milwaukee, supplemented by a similar one in St. Louis, though happily not so extensive, is a plain one. And yet it cannot be too strongly emphasized. The building of large hotels "directly up in the air," seems to be almost a mania. There is much talk about fire escapes, fire apparatus and ropes. All these are doubtless good. But in case of the panic which always results from fire, we cannot conceive of any real safety to sleepers on the upper floors. There must be the inevitable loss of life, in case of such a conflagration as was this in Milwaukee. The idea of the Springfield Republican might be open to some objections, but in the main is wise; that the dining room in our large hotels be on the top floor, to which access could be had by elevators, thus bringing the sleeping apartments nearer the ground. We judge it would not be so convenient for the landlord, but in comparison with the safety to the life of his guests, it would be small. There should also be some limit as to the height of these hotels—that limit established by law. These precautions would be fully as adequate as fire escapes; at the same time nothing that could contribute to the safety of guests at such times, should be neglected.

THE FACT has already been announced that the directors of the Lynn & Boston Horse Railroad have petitioned the Selectmen of our town for the permission to extend their rails to this town. The Selectmen, as we are informed, had designed to go over the route, but the weather and the amount of snow on the ground has not been favorable for a survey, which is necessary before the announcement of a public hearing. The time is short before the expiration of the term of office of the present board, and very likely they will feel disposed to turn over the question to the new board of Selectmen. But as there is not likely to be any extensive changes, if indeed any at all, we hope they will not feel backward about giving the matter their attention. We are informed that they are favorably disposed towards the project, and we think in this they reflect the sentiment of the larger portion of our citizens. We think there will be little opposition,—we hope there will be none at all. The railroad should be built, and as a matter of fact, while the directors of the road are in favor of the undertaking, there ought to be a harmonious support on the part of the people of the town.

THE RESULT of the ballot yesterday for United States Senator shows an election on the part of the Senate of John D. Long. It also shows that the strength of Long was much greater than the friends of the present Senator had anticipated and that the probabilities pointed very strongly to his election in a joint ballot. At the joint convention to-day, Senator Hoar had 129 on the first ballot and 131 on the second, being within eight votes of an election. The convention then adjourned till to-morrow.

The annual business meeting and reunion of the Massachusetts Press Association will take place Wednesday, Jan. 31, at the Quincy House, Boston. This house has been recently enlarged and modernized by the addition of a wing on Brattle square, and the Massachusetts press will have the honor of dedicating its new dining hall and reception rooms. The after dinner programme will consist of short speeches by members, interspersed with music. The evening will be passed at the Boston Theatre, through the courteous invitation of the proprietors, Messrs. Tompkins & Hill.

THE RUMOR is current that Gov. Butler proposes removing Julius L. Clarke, the insurance commissioner of the state. Mr. Clarke is the best posted man on insurance in this state, and there can be no possible ground for a change, save to reward some one else, by putting him in Clarke's place. We trust the Council of the Executive will put their feet solidly against any such attempt.

Mr. F. W. Lucas, the gentlemanly proprietor of the New England Boot & Shoe store, in Salem, was united in marriage last Monday to Miss Clara C. Watson, the ceremony being performed by Dr. E. C. Bolles. The couple are now on a short bridal journey, in which, as well as their future journey in life, they have our best wishes for their happiness.

The Old Colony Railroad Company is having a locomotive built which when finished, will be the largest ever run out of Boston. It will be named "Pilgrim;" and is intended to draw the steamboat train, which will take her place on the Fall River line next Summer.

PEABODY.

Heavy white frost this morning!

Regular meeting of Jordan Lodge F. A. M. this evening.

Mr. S. A. Osborne is now in the office of Frank E. Farnham, Esq.

Mrs. K. R. Stiles of Worcester, will conduct the meeting at Ashland Hall, next Sunday.

Mr. Isaac Hardy is building a new shed to cover a number of vats at his tannery on Hardy street.

A new mail has been added to the number at our post office. It will close for Salem and Boston at 4.45 P.M.

Mr. Andrew Wiggin employed at Brown's Glue Works had his hand injured recently but not so bad but that he can be about his work.

William Ragan the new Regular Army man was about town to-day. He fills one of Uncle Sam's uniforms nicely

Mr. Maurice Sullivan the veteran flagman at the Lowell street crossing is confined to the house with a severe cold.

The following officers of the Holy Name society of St. John's church were elected Sunday: President, Jas. Fallon; Secy., Richard Barry; Treas., Michael O'Gara.

The jurors for the coming term of the Criminal Court have not as yet been drawn from this town. It is optional with the sheriff to deliver the summons to the jurors to any constable.

Mr. Eri Littlefield, driver for F. A. Bragdon had his team overturned last Friday while crossing the horse railroad track. No serious damage was done. A few cakes were scattered in the vicinity.

The free evening school commenced at the Wallis school last Monday and will continue every evening in the week except Wednesday and Saturday for the next ten weeks. Mr. Geo. F. Barnes, assisted by two lady teachers will be in charge.

The splitting machine attachment, invented by John A. Enos, has been tested at the shop of Brown & Stanley's where it is in operation. Mr. McCausland, the head splitter, gives it as his opinion that "if there can be anything invented to beat that, he should like to see it."

The January sale at Wilmot's Clothing House in Salem has commenced, and by the prices which are quoted in the advertisement of this issue which our readers will notice, we should judge it would pay to buy clothing in advance. Read for yourself and see if you are not surprised.

Officer Otheinial Ferrin, for the past five years a member of the police force of this town, resigned to take effect last Monday. He will enter the employ of L. B. Southwick and work at his trade as a morocco finisher. Mr. F. has always been a faithful officer and upright and industrious citizen. The Selectmen have appointed John Sweeney to take his place.

There was a large attendance at the apron and necktie party at the Torrent Hose House last Friday evening and the affair was very successful. The buoyant step of the older portion of the company in the contra dances contrasted prettily with the more precise, yet machine-like movements of the modern dancing. The next to be held will be a coffee party.

Herbert Berry of Peabody had a very narrow escape from serious injury on Beverly bridge. He was riding in a sleigh, when a horse driven by a man from Gloucester made a bolt directly across his sleigh, cutting it completely in two. The runner of the sleigh passed over Mr. Berry's shoulder. The Gloucester man kept on without stopping to see what damage he had done. Mr. Berry was not much injured, but his sleigh is a wreck.

The event of the week with the young people was the social assembly at Upton's hall last Friday evening. Some thirty or forty couples were present and the scene was animated and gay. The Salem Cadet Orchestra furnished excellent music. The floor was under the management of Messrs. P. Brooks Bagley, Edward Trask, 2d, Samuel Bruce and John Bartlett. It is understood "there are more to follow."

The following will give a slight idea of the amount of business transacted at the Peabody Post office for the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1882. Receipts $1500. The money order work which has been in operation only a short time is on the increase. From five to ten orders a day have been issued. About 357 have been issued in all, amounting to $4500. The amount of money orders paid is about $1200. The number of registered letters sent about 300 and 173 registered letters were received.

The members of the Tabernacle choir met on Thursday evening last, in a social way, and during the evening presented Mr. Charles A. Clark, their late organist, with a handsome bronze medallion. Mr. Clark has been for more than eight years organist at the Tabernacle and his connection with the choir as well as with the parish generally, has been of the pleasantest character. He now leaves to accept a call as organist and choir master at the Catholic church in Peabody.—Observer.

The third assessment in the New England Relief Association has just been called, by the death of Mr. Chas. C. Wentworth of Boston, treasurer of the Highland Foundry. He joined the association April 17, 1882, and held a certificate for $5000 for the benefit of his widow. The association has been organized some eighteen months, and the membership is 1900, which is sufficient to pay a full benefit. There are a large number of members in this town and all consider it one of the best of associations.

The Danvers Mirror says, the Peabody folks who came up to the fire at the Rolling Mills, made considerable sport of the Danvers Water Works, which gave only about fifteen pounds pressure of water there at the time, not knowing—as every one else did not, in fact—that the main had burst a little way beyond and was discharging a full stream of water by an underground passage into the river. If they want to throw a stream of water once they should get coupled on to one of our hydrants when nothing is out of order.

What satisfaction is there in trying to suppress crime if as soon as a person is convicted he is to be pardoned out by the County Commissioners? To illustrate what we mean we will give an instance that came under our own observation recently. James Claxton, a notorious character of this town, was convicted of drunkenness, and on the last day of December was sentenced to two months in the House of Correction. On the ninth day of January he had returned home having been pardoned by the Commissioners. This is not the only case we could cite.

Mr. T. B. Elliott, a cousin of the late Isaac B. Elliott of this town, was a victim at the fire in Milwaukee. Mr. Elliott had frequently visited his relatives here and was known by many of our citizens. He jumped from the second story window, fracturing one of his arms, both of his legs, and back. Mr. Elliott was a native of Wayne Co. New York, came to Milwaukee in 1852, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. He was a member of the firm of Jenkins, Elliot & Wrinkler, and was held in high esteem. He was a prominent mason, and a state representative to the United States grand lodge of Odd Fellows. His funeral services, which were attended by these bodies, were very imposing.

Another of those pleasant events, a surprise party, occurred last evening at the house of Mr. J. Albert Perkins, a driver for Munroe & Arnold and a member of Steamer No. 2, and was the occasion of much enjoyment to those who participated. Mr. Perkins was the victim of the surprise which probably originated in the fertile brain of the boys of Steamer 2. Mr. P. was sent from his residence on some pretext or other, and upon his return found a company of forty or fifty present. Hardly had he recovered from his surprise and bid his guests welcome when he was presented with a new heavy winter overcoat. The formality of the occasion over it was followed by an excellent supper, music and games which continued till after midnight.

We call attention to the fact that the firm of Fernald & Sawyer has dissolved by the retirement of John P. Fernald. The business of the firm will be continued by Mr. Sawyer at the old stand, and a new advertisement in another column is of interest to our lady readers. The two stores will be consolidated into one Feb. 1st, and previous to that time great bargains can be found in that store. We cordially extend our best wishes for the success of Mr. Sawyer in his new enterprise. He has for many years been the active manager of the store, and his long experience in the dry goods business in all its departments, wholesale as well as retail, fits him to cater to the wants of the people of the town. We bespeak for him the support of our citizens.

The death of a young lady whose future was apparently so full of promise as that of Miss Marian A. Clark, is an event which cannot be recorded save with sadness. She had been confined to the house for a considerable time—having become a prey to that scourge of our New England climate—consumption. She was a very estimable young lady; was a graduate of our Peabody High School, and an active member of the parish of the Universalist church, of whose choir she was a member for some years. Since the death of her mother, the care of the family has come in a measure upon her; even before her death, she met the obligation willingly, and retained her interest in her home surroundings and in the church with which she was connected, to the last. As an instance of this, she had even notified the ladies of the parish who were to provide for the entertainment of the benevolent society tomorrow, what she was prepared on her part to provide. This care and thoughtfulness ran through her entire life. Mr. Clark and his bereaved family have the sympathy of our entire community in this time of trial. The funeral services will take place Friday afternoon at two o'clock.

The Committee having in charge the Firemen's Relief Association Fair is as follows:—Chairman, Engineer D. B. Lord; Secretary, J. B. Reith; Treasurer, Geo. O. Peirce; Chairman of the Committee on Prizes, Engineer W. W. Reed; Chairman of the Committee on Entertainment, W. J. Roome; Chairman Hall Committee, H. J.G. Kimball; Chairman Refreshment Committee, W. H. Hildreth; Printing Committee, J. O. Buxton; Chairman of the Committee on tickets, Frank O. Parker. The chairman of each committee has the appointing of a committee to assist him. Mr. Parker has made appointments as follows:—Engineers, W. W. Reed and Geo. O. Peirce; from Hose 1, C. K. Mallard and Fred B. Thomas; from Steamer 1, W. J. Roome and John Hart; from Steamer 2, W. H. Hildreth and M. W. Cummings; from the H. & L., J. B. Mack and Jos. H. Miller; from Hose 2, David A. Larrabee and J. B. Reith; from Hose 3, Frank A. Wilkinson and Chas. A. Hooper; from Hose 4, A. E. Johnson and John Moreland; from Hose 5, Walter Curtis and L. A. Peabody.

The members of the Murray Association to the number of seventy-five went to Lynn Monday evening by invitation of the Chapin Club connected with the First Universalist church in that city, to pay them a visit and attend one of their regular meetings. The evening was clear, the moon and stars shone brightly, the road smooth and the ride in barges furnished by Mr. Quint was much enjoyed. The visitors were met and cordially welcomed by a company of several hundred of the Chapin Club and members of the Society. After a half hour spent in social converse their attention was invited to the regular exercises of the evening. The entertainment was of a musical and literary character. The songs of the musical portion were finely rendered by a quartette of ladies under the leadership of Miss Alice Hutchinson, the soprano singer at the Universalist church in this town. The literary parts were of a high order and given in an excellent manner and the make up of those taking part in "Bob. Sawyer's tea-party" from Dickens, was admirable. At the close of the regular programme the guests were invited to seats in adjoining rooms where refreshments were served and at a late hour they took their departure well pleased with their visit.

There was published last week in the Danvers Mirror, portions of a diary of Archelaus Putnam, in which he relates the origin of the first Sabbath school kept by him in the South parish of the old town of Danvers, then under the ministry of Rev. Samuel Walker. Mr. Putnam was a member of the parish in this portion of the town. Under date of Monday morning, June 24, 1816, it says: "I therefore yesterday morning by a notification at the Meeting House, invited the male children and youth of this neighborhood to attend at the Chapel (South Parish) at 6 o'clock P. M., and I would attempt to give them an hour's catechetical instruction and continue the exercise should there be attendance. They came at the hour to the number of 13 or 14, as many as I expected the first time. They were orderly and attentive to what was said, and I gave them a lesson to commit from Emerson's Evangelical Primer, to recite it at the next school with a promise of rewarding those who should distinguish themselves in improvement with useful books and tracts. I feel encouraged with the prospect of their attendance in future with additional numbers. And oh, that God would condescend to bless this feeble attempt and cause the tender minds of the youth to receive instruction, that instruction that make them wise unto salvation. Monday, July 1st—My catechetical school last evening was pleasant, four or five more came, and I understood that some female children and youth wished to attend. I desired the boys to give them notice to attend with them the next school. Monday, Oct. 21.—On account of the shortness of the days and the growing coldness of the season, I discontinued my Sabbath School last evening. The average number of catechumens has been about 35, a third part of them have besides Mr. Emerson's Evangelical Primer and the Assembly Catechism, committed to memory and recited many of the Psalms from the Bible, and likewise Psalms and Hymns from Dr. Watts. The rest have principally attended the Catechism. In the course of this time, I have distributed among them nearly a hundred tracts and some books. The tracts were furnished through the liberality of Dea. Poole. (Deacon Fitch Poole, no doubt.)"

The January Wide Awake is quite worthy to follow even the magnificent holiday number. It has no less than seventy beautiful illustrations, and furnishes a wonderful variety of stories, poems and articles.

NORTH PEABODY.—A very agreeable surprise party took place at the house of Joseph Bolster, last Monday evening, by relatives and friends, to the number of about thirty, it being the 21st anniversary of Joseph W. Bolster's birth. He was presented with a splendid American silver watch, also an elegant chain for the same, and also with a loaf of splendid freedom cake, by a young lady of Danvers. All had a very enjoyable time, retiring to their several homes in the wee small hours of morn.

Big Elm, No. 2, situated at the junction of Andover and Prospect streets, on the estate now owned by T. J. Osborn, but formerly by the Feltons, was transplanted by Timothy Felton (brother to Nathan, or, as he was familiarly called, Old Squire Felton) in April, 1787. Its dimensions are, circumference 26, feet; height, 80 feet; estimated to contain 10 cords of wood. Here in the shade of this tree, in the ell of the house, which is supposed to be about 175 years old, the Esquire performed the duties of Town Clerk for the old town of Danvers for twenty-seven years. Here (history tells us) he granted certificates and published the banns of marriages as was the custom in those days, also performed the marriage ceremonies; he held Court here, and here bride and groom went away happy. There were divorces granted, the parties taking opposite sides of the road as each departed their own way. So much for Elm No. 2. O.

WEST PEABODY.—Last Friday night the West Peabody Farmers' Club had quite an interesting meeting. Subject, "Farm Buildings," opened by Horatio Bodge. Mr. Bodge being quite a practical farmer, laid much stress on having a good barn and cellar, with suitable shed room. J. S. Needham differed in respect to width of barn, he thought an eight square barn was much better than 60x40. J. P. King was in favor of Mr. Bodge's plan rather than Mr. Needham's. Rev. Willard Spalding thought building barns was some like religion, each one was apt to think their own the best. John G. Walcott had many questions to ask which were answered quite satisfactorily. Instrumental music was furnished by the West Peabody Chorus Club during the evening, which enlivened the meeting. Next Friday evening, George T. Angell will give one of his lectures on "Relations of animals that can speak to those that are dumb." This lecture is very highly spoken of by those that have heard it. G.

The action of a republican legislature in this state in electing for its clerk a democrat who had shown his fitness for the position by several years efficient service as assistant, is in striking contrast with the democratic city government's choice of a politician of their own political stripe in place of the man who had filled the position of city clerk of Boston for thirty years. In the light of their civil service reform professions, this action is significant.—Lynn Union.

According to Mr. Faxon's statistics, there are at least 128 members of the legislature who are ready to do the bidding of the liquor traffic, within certain elastic limits. It is certain that the prohibitionists have little to hope for in upsetting the present law, while they will have to work hard to prevent its being less stringent. It is believed, however, that the senate will be conservative enough to offset any attempt to change the present law.

A person down in Mississippi writes to a Detroit paper saying that a spoon has been found on one of the old battle fields of that state, marked with the initials "A. H. C," and the name "Butler & McCarthy." It is probably one of the old "spoons" Ben Butler lost down south, and the initials stand for his old trademark. "All Hell can't" keep me from the governorship of Massachusetts.

The Post Office Department has declared the following to be "frauds" for obtaining through the mail money by means of false and fraudulent pretences: M. J. Carille & Co., Brooklyn; Chase & Co., New Haven, Conn.; H. F. Williams & Co., alias Magnetic Watch Company; Cottage Library, Boston, Newton, Ashland, Mass.

Gov. Butler has decided not to read The Springfield Republican this year at the state's expense. When he feels a yearning for the sweetness and light manufactured up river, he will put his hand in his pocket, like a man and a capitalist, and produce the necessary nickel.—Hartford Courant.

A handsome crop of White-Rose potatoes, a new variety, has been grown from seed bought at Mr. C. M. Buffum's store, on the farm of Geo. Peabody, Esq. A single average specimen exhibited at Mr. Buffum's weighed one and three-fourths pounds.

There are lots of knowing men in this world, but we are backing Gov. Butler as knowing more things that are not so than any other white man.—Marlboro Times.

THE COUNTY VOTE.—The county commissioners have examined the returns of the votes for county offices, with the following result: For County Treasurer—E. Kendall Jenkins, 33,852; Charles A. Wentworth, 3027; Albert Currier, 296; J. F. Rabardy, 78. For Register of Deeds (Southern District)—Charles S. Osgood, 25,716; Francis H. Caskins, 2507: Daniel W. Friend, 522; W. F. M. Collins, 296. The returns from Rowley for register of deeds were not signed by the town clerk and were therefore thrown out. No votes were returned for Francis H. Caskins in Danvers, which is his place of residence, although it is understood that he had about 306 votes there.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

We regard the erection of every new house in our midst as a matter of local pride, in that it shows an increase of business prosperity and contributes to the growth of the town. During the past few years there has been a manifest increase in building; and the opening up of localities which have proved very desirable upon occupancy. Among these is the new house in the rear of Mrs. Sutton's estate, recently built by Charles S. Osgood, and nearly ready for occupancy. The land upon which it is set is slightly elevated, and from the upper stories of the house is one of the finest views we have noticed hereabouts. From one side the eye takes in the entire range of Washington St., another side Main St., and toward the south can be seen the larger part of So. Peabody. The location is truly a fortunate one, and the opening up of a new street by the town through to Oak street would seem to be one of the desirable things of the near future. Many fine building lots could be thus obtained, at no great distance from the square. The house of Mr. Osgood is two stories high with a piazza and bay windows, fronting towards the east. A carefully graded walk and driveway leads to the front portico, and on entering the hall we find a nicely arranged and convenient house. On the left, entering from the hall, is the parlor and sitting room, each about 15 feet square, the former having a clear white marble mantel, and the latter a mantel of Tennessee marble and an open fire place, with a bay window on the south side. An entrance to the dining room can be had through the front hall directly, from the sitting room and from the hall on the back side of the house. Here is a closet for china ware, and connected with it by a slide is the kitchen, a room 14 x 18, with hard pine floor, tinted walls, and neatly grained. There is light in the room from windows on the three sides: there is a large storeroom opening from it with marble pastry slab, shelves and all necessary culinary conveniences. A fine Eddy refrigerator is set into the wall, the rear opening into the hall, in which it is designed to fit a neat door, for the reception of ice without an entrance into the kitchen. Upstairs there is a large front hall, almost a room by itself, the front chamber has an open fire place, and all the rooms excepting the one over the kitchen are heated from a large Winthrop furnace which was set by Norton & Gilman, to whom was entrusted all the work in this line. There is a bath room finished in ash, with commode, bath tub and sanitary closet, an invention designed to keep away all odor, having a ventilator to the chimney and keeping the bowl full of water at all times. This was furnished by Frank A. Wendell, who did all the plumbing, a sure indication that it has been faithfully done. The attic rooms are furnished and command a view which is unsurpassed in the locality. In the cellar a room under the kitchen is to be finished for a wash room—with set tubs and all the appliances, and the rest of the cellar with the exception of a small room for the reception of vegetables and the like, is cemented. Mr. Edward Giddings has had the entire charge of the building operations, and the work has been done well. The plans of the house were drawn by Architect Dennis of Salem, the mason work was done by E. D. Trask & Son, the painting by George F. Ward, and the fittings and fixtures for gas and water put in by George H. Little. The house is roomy and well appointed in all respects—a credit to the taste of both owner and builder.

In common with other associations the American Legion of Honor is busy in its various councils with the installation of officers. This interesting ceremony was performed last Friday evening for Fitch Poole Council of this town, by D. D. G. C., Henry C. Torr, with satisfaction to all concerned. The council met at the house of its commander, Dr. F. S. Worcester, and after the council had closed, the members were surprised by the appearance of their wives who had prepared a dainty repast for them. After the eating, an hour, or rather two hours quickly passed in social converse, during which many unreportable, wise and witty sayings were proclaimed and very pleasant time enjoyed.

On Monday evening of this week, the officers of Fitch Poole Council visited Naumkeag Council in Salem, when the ceremony of installation was performed by D. D. G. C., Charles R. Brown, of Lynn. There were delegations present from Lynn and Beverly. After the special exercises of installation an old fashioned supper, consisting of coffee, baked beans, brown bread, etc., was served, a fine musical entertainment was given including an old folks concert, vocal and instrumental music of more modern type, and a laughable recitation by Mr. Newhall.

The arrangements for the grand fair to be held at Upton's Hall, commencing March 27, and ending April 2d, by the Peabody Firemen's Relief Association, are progressing finely. A large company of ladies have signified their intention of enlisting for the work, and active operations will soon commence. Three thousand season tickets will be issued to be sold at $1.00 each. The attention of our readers is called to the card of Marsh's hotel, in another column. Mr. Marsh has leased the block formerly occupied by Wm. Donnell on Main street, and it has been thoroughly renovated. Mr. Marsh has spent over a month in the repairs, and it has been painted and newly papered, every room furnished with new carpets and furniture, and it is in every respect worthy of patronage. Mr. Marsh has had many years experience in the hotel line, in Concord, Plymouth and Weirs, N. H., and intends to make the place first class in every respect. In addition to regular meals, oysters and steaks will be cooked to order at all times of the day.

There is a class of readers of the local newspaper, which one would naturally think would be far more numerous than it is. It comprises those who have formerly lived in this or adjoining towns and now reside in places far remote. It would seem that to such, a paper published in the midst of childhood's associations, each issue of which contains something of more than ordinary note concerning the friends of their youth, would possess a peculiar interest in their far-away homes. From the considerable number who buy the PRESS for this purpose we are continually reminded of its welcome reception.

In the case of John Shaw, 2d, vs. H. D. Hail coming up in the Superior Court, it was an action to recover the value of a horse alleged to have been sold for another horse and $1000. The ruling of the lower court was that the agent for Hall, on the evidence, could not be found by the jury to have had any original authority to buy the horse for the defendant. The case was reported to the Supreme Court, which decides that "While the evidence offered tended to show dishonest conduct, and purposes on the part of the defendant, it did not make out or afford proper evidence of Golden's agency sufficient to be submitted to the jury."

The new firm of Poor & Littlefield, morrocco dressers, on Lowell street, are doing a very successful business. Their building is about 125 feet in length and is divided into the several departments necessary to the business, including the tan tubs, coloring, black finish, drying lofts, etc. They are finishing large quantities of sheep skins in all the fine tints, such as pale blue, old gold, flesh pink, etc., also large quantities in black. The shop is supplied with the latest machinery and about fifty hands are employed. Both of the young men are enterprising and deserve their continued success.

The Essex Agricultural Society will hold a Farmers' Institute at Fraternity Hall, Newburyport, Tuesday, Jan. 23d, 1883, at 9.30 o'clock A. M. Morning session, Subject—Diking and Reclaiming Salt Marsh. Messrs. Baker of Marshfield and Gregory of Marblehead will speak. Afternoon, Subject—Development and Training of the Family Horse. Mr. O. S. Butler of George town will commence the discussion, to be followed by all who desire to participate. It is expected that the Boston & Maine and Eastern Railroads will furnish free return tickets.

PEOPLE IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

The lower orders proper live very much like their brethren in Christian countries. Both men and women work. The wife helps her lord and master in the daily toil, washes, cleans and keeps the house in order; she has neither time nor opportunity for frivolous amusements, consequently she is more respected both by husband and children, and knows not the heart-sickness and weariness of the harem. But even here women do not eat with the men, and do not stir outside their domicile unveiled. There is no middle class among the Turks. There are the rich (or easy) and the poor. These two orders are constantly changing places. The rich man of to-day may be the poor one of to-morrow. You will know him by his shabby, greasy coat and unbrushed shoes. He will make no effort to keep up an appearance. You may see him buy some simple fare and eat it in the street on his way to business or home. He has lost his place. He is poor. He is neglected. Meeting him thus, you might suppose him a shoe-mender, or a low class coffee-house keeper, yet he has only just missed being a Pasha, and a few months more will probably reinstate him in the position he has lost. The men and women of the country are naturally on a par. There is no genius, no talent, no eminence of virtue among them (or if there be, it is banished as soon as it dare lift its head.) One man is as good as another. A fair address, a smattering of French, and "good luck," are all that are wanted to make a nobody First Minister; but the same fortune grown fickle may hurl him from his post, and he sinks lower than what we understand by the "poorest gentleman." One fact baffles European would-be reformers. We are always meeting with surprises. There is nothing solid anywhere. There is no public spirit, no landed interest, no trade interest, no personal authority—nothing to grapple with. Everything slips through your fingers. The laws exist, but are not enforced. It is nobody's business to enforce them. Property is yours to-day, mine to-morrow, and a week hence it may be Mahmoud's, or Safnet's, or Ahmed's. The one thing permanent among us is the watchful jealousy of the various nationalities. It is the different Consuls that keep order here, not the Turks; and were it not for this protection Europeans could not live in Turkey. The Turks are indifferent tradesmen. Nearly all the shops in Galata, and the whole of those in Pera, are kept by Europeans. The Greeks are the chief traders, though a smart business is done by the Levantines. The most fashionable shops are French, but there are a few first-class English and American ones. A large class of Turks hawk their wares in the street. They are for the most part fine stalwart, civil-spoken men. They shoulder enormous baskets containing cheese, creams, fruits, vegetables and many other comestibles, and furnish more than half the alimentation of the city. The habits of these men are very simple; they live chiefly upon bread and fruit; but they also know the secret of the pot au-feu, and often I have seen a knot of them after their day's work, grouped under a shed, or on a green spot of earth, mixing the "savory mess"—you will perhaps be shocked to hear the pot contains vegetables (of onions a large share) stewed in oil! A somewhat strong-tasted mutton called Karamani is the favorite food of the Turkish upper classes. Pilaff is also an every-day dish, wherein Europeans also delight. The chief fault of the Turkish cooking is the enormous quantity of grease and fat consumed, and the excessive sweetness of many of the dishes.—Temple Bar.

PERSUASIVENESS OF THE MUSKET.

General Steedman tells a good story which is applicable to the manner in which the aristocratic Sixtieth Rifles recently skipped out in front of Ramleh, and gave everything up to the Egyptians. While near Nashville the General had a negro regiment on the picket line, and a young, bright mulatto Sergeant in command of a post got the drop on a Confederate post, and captured the whole outfit. They were composed of a crowd of high-stepping young Virginians, and some of them were badly wrought up by the idea of having to surrender to a "lot of niggers."

General Steedman took their commander, a fine young fellow into his tent, extended some little courtesies to him, and in the course of the conversation, said:

"It was a little tough, Lieutenant, to be taken in by colored soldiers, but war has strange experiences."

"Well, General," said the other, as he set down his glass, "I've been in the army now nearly four years, and if I've learned anything, it has been a profound respect for the musket. When the muzzle is shoved into my face I don't usually ask any questions as to who's got hold of the breech."—Toledo Blade.

THE HAM.

"Here, waiter: what do you call this you've brought me?" inquired a customer. Waiter—"Ham, sir; you ordered ham." Customer—"When was it cooked?" Waiter (snappishly)—"I don't know, sir; we don't put tags on with the date and time of cooking!" Customer—"You ought to. This ham was cooked thirty or forty years ago. Bring me some that was cooked this year."—Chambers's Journal.

A STARTLING STATEMENT!

Corroborated by the Chief of Police.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1881.

DR. CHARLES CRAIG:—Dear Sir: Suffering as I have been for a long time with a fearful cold, that finally settled into what is termed quick consumption, and so pronounced by the attending physician, I heard of your Consumption Cure, and while having little faith in anything benefitting me, procured some of it, used it, and to day am, to the wonder of myself and friends, a well man.—I write this, as I feel in duty bound to do, for the benefit of suffering humanity, and can but hope that the thousands who are now suffering with that supposed incurable disease Consumption will try your Consumption Remedy. They will receive speedy relief and a permanent cure. You can send any one to me who cares to be advised as to the manner in which your medicines cured me.

P. H. SULLIVAN, Captain Police.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 14, 1882.

We, the undersigned, are personally acquainted with Captain P. H. Sullivan. We knew of his debilitated condition at one time, are knowing to the fact that he is now daily on duty, and are satisfied he would not make any statement that was not strictly true.

Miscellaneous.

PIRATICAL ORIGIN OF A NAVY.

The piratical origin of the navies of Europe sufficiently explains the fact that plunder, which is less the rule than an incident of war on land, remains its chief object and feature at sea. The fact may further be explained by the survival of piracy that was long sanctioned by the States, under the guise of privateering. If we would understand the popularity of wars in England in the old privateering days, we must recall the magnificent fortunes which were often won as prize-money in the career of legalized piracy. During the war which was concluded in 1748 by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, England captured of French and Spanish ships collectively 3,434, while she herself lost 3,238; but, small compensation as this balance of 196 ships in her favor may seem after a contest of about nine years, the pecuniary balance in her favor is said to have amounted to £2,000,000. We now begin to see why our forefathers rang their church bells at the announcement of war, as they did at the declaration of this one against Spain. War represented to large classes what the gold mines of Peru represented to Spain—the best of all possible pecuniary speculations. In the year 1747 alone the English ships took 644 prizes, and of what enormous value they often were! Here is a list of the values which the cargoes of these prizes not infrequently reached: That of the Heron, a French ship, £140,000; that of the Conception, a French ship, £200,000; that of La Charmante, a French East Indiaman, £200,000; that of the Vestal, a Spanish ship, £140,000; that of the Hector, a Spanish ship, £300,000; that of the Concordia, a Spanish ship, £600,000. Two Spanish register ships are recorded to have brought in £350 to every foremast man who took part in their capture. In 1745 three Spanish vessels returning from Peru having been captured by three privateersmen, the owners of the latter received to their separate shares the sum of £700,000, and every common seaman £850. Another Spanish galleon was taken by a British man-of-war with £1,000,000 in bullion on board.—The Gentleman's Magazine.

THE TITLE OF ESQUIRE.

The legislative prohibition by the United States of titles of nobility could not eradicate the trait of human nature which makes such titles, or any verbal badge of distinction, a dearly craved prize to the mass of people; but in our eagerness for these we have done more to abolish them than any laws, by making them ridiculous. A title given to everybody is a self-contradiction and absurdity, for it distinguishes no one and implies nothing; and, in our democratic society, no one is willing to give others the monopoly of such distinction. In consequence, several titles which were tolerably definite in meaning once have become tags that do not add a hair to the meaning of the name itself. Among these is "Esq.," once a coveted badge of professional distinction, and in early New England times confined rigidly to its narrow use—indeed, even "Mr." was only allowed to respectable householders in good standing. Coming to us from feudal England, "Esq." marked members of the legal fraternity and kindred occupations. It was at length assumed by or conferred by courtesy upon prominent and wealthy citizens, and at last has come to mean only an adult male citizen—the same as "Mr.," or, in general, the same as the name would imply without addition. It is therefore utterly useless, a bore and an offence; for a meaningless title is an affront to any man. It should be disused altogether, and left to be marked "obsolete" in the dictionaries. Write "John Smith," or "Mr. John Smith," if you please, but let us have no more of "John Smith, Esq."—Travelers' Record.

WHY SHE ASKED AGAIN.

"Won't you please tell me where the Closter train is?" asked a petite, handsome woman of a Hackensack man in the Jersey City depot of the N. Y., L. E. & W. R. R., yesterday afternoon.

"You mean the Carlstadt train?" he gallantly suggested.

"No, sir; that's what they all tell me. What I want is the train for Closter—C-l-o-s-t-e-r," she smilingly said. "Can you tell me where it is?"

"I can't say exactly, but—"

Just here a big, burly, blue-coated official stepped up and, with a pompous air, exclaimed:

"I've told you four times where that train was."

"Very true, sir," replied the polite little lady; "but you told me different every time."

The official wilted and shuffled off in despair, while the lady found the train.—Hackensack Republican.

A CRACK SHOT.

The chief sportsman of Hartwell, Ga., tells that he practised with a toy rifle until he could hit a nail with the little bullet every time, and then went frog hunting in the mill pond. Seeing a big specimen meditating on a log, he began firing. On the twenty-seventh round the game rolled into the water, but when taken out, it was found alive, though terribly swollen. The frog had mistaken the bullets for flies, caught them in his mouth, swallowed every one without discovering the error, and been finally carried overboard by the weight of lead.

From the Pittsfield, (Mass.,) Eagle.

Stone in the Bladder is at once a most annoying and very dangerous ailment; but many most remarkable cures have of late been wrought by "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy"—the invention of Dr. Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y. Another striking case is now added to the list. Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., states in a letter to Dr. Kennedy that he had been troubled with bladder complaint for 14 years, and had consulted at different times seven physicians; but nothing beyond temporary allayment of the pain had been worked for him. Towards the end of last January Mr. Lawler called on Dr. Kennedy. Sounding him, the doctor "struck stone." He decided that Mr. Lawler should first try the "Favorite Remedy," so as, if possible, to avoid an operation. And here is the remarkable result: "Dear Doctor Kennedy—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. If you would like to see the stones I will send them to you." This letter bears date "Dalton, Mass., Feb. 6," and is signed "Peter Lawler." The stones, which are so large as to warrant for "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" the claim that it is the most successful specific for Stone yet discovered, are now in Dr. Kennedy's possession. Incidentally Mr. Lawler also states that the "Favorite Remedy" at the same time cured him of a stubborn case of rheumatism; and it has fact that in all affections arising out of disorders of the liver or urinary organs it is a searching remedy and works marvelous benefits. It is in itself almost a medicine chest. Order it of your druggist. Price $1 a bottle. jan 17

ALMOST AS BAD.

What the Perplexed Physicians do in Cases of Emergency.

"I'll tell you the honest truth," answered the doctor. "Bright's Disease bothers the medical men almost as badly as cancer does. Having passed a certain stage, both point straight to eternity. It may be unprofessional to let out the secret, but whenever a patient comes to me with Bright's Disease, or any kidney trouble acting like it, I tell him to put on BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER without delay."

The doctor spoke by the card. The Capcine goes right to the spot. If you can be helped, the Capcine will do it. Look out for frauds. Is the word CAPCINE cut in the middle of the plaster? If so, you are all right. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York. Highest awards. jan 17

Miscellaneous.

THE MYSTERY OF MEMORY.

Coleridge dared to maintain that we do not really forget; that thoughts and events only seem to be lost from recollection; and that if the intellect were quickened a little the whole past existence would be brought to view again. In illustration, he gives at length the story of the ignorant servant-girl who repeated whole psalms in the original Hebrew when deranged, of which she could not recall a word in her sane moments. She seems to have learned them from an eccentric minister's repeating them aloud as he paced the kitchen floor. De Quincey tells a little better than many others of a drowning friend reviving his whole experience at the seeming approach of death, with the intimation that under similar excitement this would be the experience of nearly all men, showing that even the earliest past still lives. Many of our German immigrants lose their native tongue, but in the weakness of the last hour nothing is more common than its return, with other thronging recollections of childhood.

The famous William Tennent, of New Jersey, seemed, at his return to life after two days' death, not even to recognize the Bible his sister was reading. By and by his brother was repeating a passage from a Latin reader, when it burst like a lightning flash upon the strengthening consciousness of Tennet that these were old, familiar terms, and all his forgetfulness soon disappeared.

Niebuhr, the Oriental traveler, when old, feeble and blind, saw hardly anything, hour after hour, but the magnificent scenes of the East pictured on his memory. The cloudless blue of the eastern heaven, bending so motherly over the vast deserts beneath, shone more vividly than when he had wandered in those scorching rays.

Abercrombie tells us of a four years' old boy, who, after being trepanned for a blow on his skull, lost all recollections of the injury. But, ten years after, delirium brought back every incident of his suffering, and he detailed it all from the beginning. When Sir Walter Scott's memory seemed to have gone, he was yet able to recall the Watts' poems and the Scripture lessons of his infancy. These facts are full of suggestions, especially to clergymen.

CHARLES I. AND JAMES II. AT WHITESTONE

Much controversy has, however, been indulged in by historians of London as to the spot in the Banqueting-hall, Whitehall, whence Charles stepped on to the scaffold. Some say that he passed through a window, others that the brick-work was disturbed for the purpose. Herbert, the King's faithful attendant, who was with his master to the end, tells us "the King was led all along the galleries and Banqueting-house, and there was a passage broken through the wall by which he passed unto the scaffold." Mr. Jesse says: "It is perhaps sufficient to observe that at the renovation of the Banqueting-house a fact was made apparent which, I amagine, will be considered as setting the question at rest. Having curiosity enough to visit the interior of the building, the walls of which were then laid bare, a space was pointed out to me between the upper and lower centre windows of about seven feet in height and four in breadth, the bricks of which presented a broken and jagged appearance, and the brick-work introduced was evidently of a different date from that of the rest of the building. There can be little doubt that it was through this passage that Charles walked to the fatal stage." A curious history is attached to the weathercock we now see. It was erected by James II. directly he heard that William had embarked from Holland, in order that he might see whether the wind blew from the east or west, for from the quarter of the wind he would judge William's chances of reaching England, whether they were good or bad. A strange feature of the weathercock was that it bore a cross, the peculiar symbol of James's religion. The cross is no longer there.—The Cornhill Magazine.

HIS DUTY TO SING.

A lawyer, giving reminiscences of humorous cases in court, said: "An odd case was that of the State vs. Linkham, 69, N. C., 214. The defendant was indicted for disturbing a religious congregation. He was an individual of exemplary deportment, but he had a rather imperfect idea of hymn-singing. The disturbance, which was decided and serious, consisted partly in his holding on the notes long after the other singers had let go. The effect of this persistence was to make one part of the congregation laugh and the other mad; the irreligious and frivolous enjoyed it as fun, while the devout were highly indignant. On many occasions, being expostulated with, Linkham invariably replied that he would worship his God, and that as a part of his worship it was his duty to sing. The jury, I believe, found the man guilty, but the extenuating circumstances that he had no purpose of disturbing the congregation and that his only fault was the eccentric character of his vocalization served to reverse the verdict. These cases are but a suggestion of the rich material for the satirist and all literary fellows which lies entombed in the dust-encumbered records of the courts."

There are a good many real miseries in life that we cannot help smiling at, but they are the smiles that make wrinkles and not dimples.

A dull proser is more endurable than a dull joker.

The NEW YORK, 1883. Sun.

More people have read THE SUN during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read and like THE SUN for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at pr sent revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs THE SUN makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whale as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The SUN has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the SUN is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robesonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the SUN stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the SUN is the best religious newspaper ever published, because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor.—A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the SUN discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the SUN, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before.—If you do not already know the SUN, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of commonsense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government, a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

Terms to Mail Subscribers.

The several editions of THE SUN are sent by mail, postpaid, as follows:

DAILY—55 cents a month. $6.50 a year; with Sunday edition, $7.70.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—$1 year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues; an Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, market reports, and literary, scientific and domestic intelligence make THE WEEKLY SUN the newspaper for the farmer's household. To clubs of ten with $10, an extra copy free. Address

COMPOUND PEPSIN TONIC

Compound essence of pepsin. A remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion as shown in loss of appetite, nausea, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, water-brash, and a sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach. Dose, one tablespoonful (for adults) before meals.

Dyspepsia or indigestion is very prevalent in this country owing to habits of living—especially of eating and drinking. There is a disagreeable sensation in the stomach, although there may be no pain. When there is pain it is located in the breast, giving rise to fears of lung disease. There is a slight nausea; the mouth is clammy, or has a sour, bitter taste; the complexion is sallow, the bowels are costive, and there may be heartburn, water-brash, flatulence, palpitation of the heart (causing fear of heart disease), headache or double sight. The disease may be caused by either too much or too little exercise, too severe application of the mind, excessive emotion, intemperance in alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea or coffee, too warm and too rich food, ice water, excessive use of medicine, etc. For sale by

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings, Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummingt, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it."

J. E. Bruorton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March-1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE

—OF THE—

ADVERTISER

is ONE DOLLAR per month. The Advertiser circulates in the finest families and the most prominent counting-rooms.

The Duties due to Society by the Farmers, as Members of the Body Politic.

BY E. C. FARWELL.

(Before the W. Peabody Farmer's Club.)

To analyze our subject we find that the word Society resembles the Latin, from which it is derived, both in spelling and pronunciation, and means "the union of many in one general interest." The word Farmer was derived from the Latin, also, to suit an English purpose, and in England meant one who "supplied food," which was the former way of paying rent in that country, where farming lands were leased. With us it means one who cultivates land. The "body politic," pol-i-tic, is all persons who are joined together under the bond of citizenship. As citizens, living under written constitutions, which have been accepted by ourselves, it becomes our foremost duty to become familiar with them. Our National Constitution, framed by men who had the general welfare at heart, and approved, after careful deliberation by the States, ought to be understood in every citizen's home; and by its side should be found the Constitution of our own State, which enlarges upon, while it conforms to the provisions and limits prescribed by the Constitution of this sisterhood of States. Also, in the company of these documents should be found our Town By-Laws.

These form the basis of our social system, and as such their provisions ought to be far more generally known than they are to-day. It is no reason because some articles of a constitution have no immediate interest to us to-day, that they may not affect us seriously in the near future; and we should be always prepared by having our knowledge and opinions based upon such information. I have referred briefly to our combined general duty as citizens of Nation, State and Town, but our subject refers to that portion of our duty as citizens in which we find our personal interest most clearly defined, and which combined with the more general duties just referred to, makes up the value of a good citizen. It is in the best development of our homes, and their immediate surroundings, that the individual, the State and the Nation collectively derive the most benefit. Did each and every citizen pursue this course with zeal, upon well prepared plans, they would indeed be surrounded by a model community. By united action alone can the most success be attained by any part of society. It is by both parties to a discussion, coolly and attentively seeking for the opinions of the other, that the most effective course of action can be agreed upon. Such agreements are always possible where prejudice and outside influence can be banished.

It is by the aid of reading matter and lectures, also by public and private discussions, and a general exchange of ideas that we gain the information which best guides us in our course of action. It is for such purposes that our Farmers' Club becomes of value. By the most judicious cultivation of ourselves, our children and our lands, we are doing our best to make the most of each integral part of the body politic. The saying, however, that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is true for older people as well as for the younger. In performing the necessary and more sober part of life we must see to it that we do not omit a judicious admixture of pleasure for our home-circle. It is indispensable to proper success. There are however many to whom success is, in itself, a sufficient pleasure, and such are usually those who lead in worldly prosperity, and at the same time bear the greatest weight of mental responsibility, without being physically disabled thereby. Discussions at this club afford us opportunities for giving vent to our cherished theories, give us the chance of thus drawing out the opinions of those disagreeing with our pet ideas, and of inviting the free, and often forcible, expression in regard to the subjects placed before us. But to reap the true benefits from discussion we must be careful to guard against all chance of being influenced by any prejudice or touch of vexation, which might arise from necessarily forcible criticisms of our theories, remembering that the foremost and best ideas of to-day will very likely be laid aside, and surpassed by more advanced opinions, sooner or later, in the steady march of improvement. And this result which is beneficial, even to the most conservative, is the out-come of discussion, listened to with clear and impartial minds. As to the cultivation of ourselves, our respective powers of thinking have already been formed and we can find the means of increasing our knowledge within easy reach.

Our Club, with its essays and discussions, and the excellent library within our town, with its accompanying lectures, are for our entertainment and instruction. Farmers' Institutes are provided, under the direction of our Essex Agricultural Society, which are free to all citizens of the County, where opinions of those outside of our own circle can be heard. But, ladies and gentlemen, we, whose childhood is a thing of the past, can thereby learn an instructive lesson and find food for study, and a useful help, or warning, in planning the education of our children. They in turn are in time to assume our places, but first will be called upon to join with us as citizens responsible for their part of the body politic. It is for us to provide for them such an education as shall train them in all the necessary rudiments, and beyond that, such as shall so instruct them that they may find pleasure and attraction in the work of life that may naturally fall to their lot. I believe that this latter should be far more attended to than it is to-day, in the earlier training of our children, and to accomplish it that the natural sciences, botany, entomology, etc., should be more taught in our schools. A better knowledge and understanding of the wonderful works of nature that surround us would attract to, and must prove of value in, any occupation that might be undertaken later in life, and be equally a training for the mind.

One of our most important duties should be to insure the best courses of education for those who are to become members of the body politic, and an occasional discussion of this subject cannot fail to be of value. I question whether the same, or similar courses of training are advisable in all schools, not including High Schools, throughout any single city or town, but the same or similar objects are to be sought in all schools, by varied courses of study, each adapted to the locality surrounding the school. The desire being rather to foster, than separate, the home circle. In considering all schooling, we must regard it as separated into two parts; namely, that part which teaches what every citizen should know, as spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, etc., and a second part which trains the mind to think, and decide what is the proper and best course through life for the individual to pursue. The first part of schooling must necessarily be the same in all schools, varied only by the capability of the teacher, while the second part can be attained by the study of, or application of the mind to, a great variety of interesting subjects. It seems to me that it would be appropriate and advisable to adopt this latter part of school training to the probable requirements, suggested by the occupations, of the citizens surrounding each school, keeping prominent a desire to afford information combined with mutual training, that will prove attractive and valuable to the youth, should his or her future life be passed in, or near the home of childhood.

It is important to make our schools attractive to children, and make it as little necessary as possible to force them within school walls. Much depends, however upon the earlier home influence. I would have it clearly understood that I have made no direct reference to High schools, where those, whose inclination is in that direction, can continue, and increase their mental training and knowledge. I have dwelt upon this part of the subject somewhat at length deeming it one that deserves, at all times, the careful consideration of our population, especially as the safety of our cherished institutions rests upon its careful development, especially in its earliest forms. It would seem also to be just to our School Committees, that our people should discuss and express their opinions upon such subjects, for the guidance of such committees, when it is possible to do so as is the case with existing Farmers' Clubs.

Having referred to the cultivation of ourselves and our children let me refer rather briefly to our lands, the importance of their cultivation being such that it requires separate and more extended thought than can be now given to it, and as it can be hardly included in our subject for this evening, I pass that by. But let us consider it as a fact that you all as citizens of West Peabody, have one common interest in the judicious development of all your lands taken as a whole, regarding them as if you had a general desire to encourage improvement within your limits. I suppose we have all of us indulged more or less in building air-castles, most of which, if not all, have disappeared as completely as our children's soap-bubbles. I have sometimes built air-castles in my imagination, as to the possibilities of the future development of these tracts of land in which you live. It is high rolling land, well wooded, naturally well drained, picturesque and healthful. The uplands are such as would be the very best as homes for many people, who now live and bring up their children in the confined and unnatural quarters of the cities. May the time come when you shall be able to benefit such people and yourselves, by knowing that this land is sought after for the benefit of such as are now city people. Such is an air castle that I have indulged in, and my better thought tells me that such is one of the evident possibilities of the future.

To improve the general appearance of this locality is then to advance the attractiveness, and consequently the value of every acre of land within it. With good roads and a judicious care of the roadsides you will be doing very much. By preserving deciduous trees upon the road-sides, whose leaves fall every autumn you will have what you should desire, and in other places where a natural growth does not exist it need cost no more than a little energy to prepare the ground, get a few maples from the woods and carefully set them out along the road by your homes. Let us hastily reflect upon an evil of our political system, known under the name of bossism, which has more recently been brought prominently to our notice. It is entirely foreign to our true system of Government, and is somewhat borrowed from foreign ideas. As citizens we are obliged to delegate our authority to others in conducting the affairs of Government, but we must see to it that our delegate shall always be one who will act according to our wishes. Every citizen should have an intelligent opinion or voice in all that concerns our public affairs. We can recognize in the recent turn of the political tide throughout the country, that the people have distinctly said that there has been too great an attempt to boss them. We must always look to the average intelligence of our citizens for the best judgement in regard to the welfare and safety of the country, and not forget this fact until it is late. Suggestions and new ideas as to public duty can come from others, but it is for the more practical citizens to decide upon the courses that shall take effect.

There are certain individuals practicing what they call "law" in the Massachusetts courts who are a positive damage to their clients every time. They swell up, and strut about, and put insulting questions to witnesses, and try to browbeat the judge, and yell at the jury, and perform various other antics until everybody is disgusted with them. It is a wonder that such fellows ever get employment, and they never would if clients knew their own interests.—Cambridge Press.

To the heirs of JOHN RAY, and all other parties interested:

By virtue of a mortgage deed given by JOHN RAY to JAMES McGLINCHY, dated October 17th, A. D. 1877, and recorded with Essex, Southern District, Deeds, Book 985, Leaf 271, and assigned by WILLIAM L. PUTNAM, administrator of the estate of said McGlinchy, to JOHN A. PUTNAM, by deed dated July 24th A.D. 1882, and assigned by said John A. Putnam to WILLIAM H. GOVE, by deed dated August 1st, A. D. 1882, and assigned by said William H. Gove to MARTHA S. PUTNAM, by deed dated August 1st, A. D. 1882, and for breach of conditions in said mortgage deed contained, will be sold at public auction, on the first lot hereinafter described, on Thursday, Jan. 18, A. D. 1883, at three o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular, the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, viz.: First,—a parcel of pasture land situate in Peabody, in the county of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, near Felton's Corner, and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the corner on the lane by land now or formerly of the heirs of the late Malachi Wilson; thence easterly, by said heirs' land, forty rods and five inches to land now or late of Stephen N. Proctor; thence southerly by said Proctor's land eighteen rods and seventeen links, to land now or late of Moses Preston; thence westerly by said Preston's land twenty-one rods and twelve links to the lane; thence northerly by said lane twenty-eight rods and sixteen links to the first named bound Containing about three acres and one hundred and twenty-three poles.

Second,—Another parcel of land in said Peabody, bounded beginning at a point on Prospect street, one hundred and twenty feet distant southwesterly as the wall stands from the burying ground; thence running by said street and wall northeasterly to the burying ground; thence northwesterly by the walls as they stand by said burying-ground, by land now or formerly of Felton and land now or formerly of Elijah Wilson, six hundred and forty-two feet and eleven inches to land now or formerly of heirs of M. Wilson; thence southwesterly by land of said heirs one hundred and forty-one feet by the wall as it now stands; thence south of easterly in a direct line by land formerly of Richard S. Rogers, five hundred and eighty-two feet and two inches, to the point begun at. Containing about one acre three roods and thirty-eight and one-half rods.

Said estate will be sold, subject to the mortgage of John Ray to Richard S. Rogers, recorded with said Essex Deeds, Book 597, Leaf 131; John Ray to Aaron Eveleth, recorded with said deeds, Book 837, Leaf 180; John Ray to James Pike, recorded with said deeds, Book 904 Leaf 214. All of which said mortgages have been assigned, and are now held by the undersigned.

NEW YEAR'S GREETING OF 1883.

BROKEN LOTS.

At this time of the year, after the regular season's trade is over we have a large number of Overcoats, Suits and Pantaloons left, which are in broken lots and which we shall sell in many cases at less than the actual cost of the fabric from which they are manufactured. The reason of our selling these goods at such ridiculously low prices is because the sizes are not complete and consequently ought not to be carried over to next season.

In order to close these goods we have marked them at prices that will sell them, to the last garment.

REMEMBER! We may not be able to fit all, but those of you who can get fitted will get wonderful bargains. If you don't wish them for this winter, buy them for next. It will pay you.

We have not space to enumerate the articles, styles or prices, but ask you to come and see for yourself, and we are sure you will be repaid for your time and trouble.

ALL of our departments are included in this sale; if you are in need of anything that we have in any of our departments, be sure and give us a call.

N. B. Would call your special attention to a bargain lot of Winter driving vests, made from heavy winter overcoatings which we shall offer, to close, at $1.50, 2.00, 2.50 and $3.00.

OUR DEPARTMENTS.

The Entertainment committee of the Unity Club have had in mind for some time the presentation of some dramatics for their "Organ fund." On Thursday evening of next week, Feb. 1st, they will give the comedy of "Doing for the best" and the farce of "Popping the Question." The leading parts will be taken by the members of the club and their friends, and we expect to see the chapel full on the occasion.

The new play of Courage, for which elaborate preparations have been made for some months, was produced Monday evening at the Park Theatre, for the first time on any stage. The auditorium was packed; and from its reception on the opening night, it is assured of full houses to the close of its run. The play is one of striking character, and the interest in the plot is developed at the opening. The scenes are laid in New York and Cuba, and the chief incident of the plot is the arrest and condemnation of a young American by the Spaniards in Cuba. The efforts for his rescue, by his betrothed and a young Cuban girl, the daughter of a wealthy plantation owner, who also had fallen in love with him, and her final sacrifice of herself to death to save him for her rival, are portrayed in a vivid manner. There are some impossible scenes, but in the main it is a play that will draw. The scenery was the finest ever attempted at this Theatre, and with the Cuban ballet, rich costumes, and profusion of flowers, seems like fairy land. The acting was very even for the opening night. To Miss Rose Osborn is assigned the part of the heroine, and in the most powerful scenes she displays good dramatic power. Mr. Mark Pendleton, as Howard Temple, was equal to the requirements of the part. Miss Katie Gilbert as the Cuban girl, was remarkably fine, and in the scene where she reveals to her rival the perfidy of the Spanish secret agent, she was greeted with rounds of applause. It is to be regretted that only two weeks are allotted to the run of "Courage." We see no reason why it should not run as many months.

The first week of the engagement of John McCullough at the Boston Theatre closed with the announcement "Standing room only." This is a sure evidence of the popularity of this sterling actor. To-morrow evening "King Lear" will be presented, "Brutus" Friday evening, "Ingomar" at the Saturday matinee and "Jack Cade" Saturday evening. The engagement will positively close Feb. 3d, and next week's repertoire has not been announced.

This is the second and last week of the engagement of Colville's "Taken from Life" company at the Globe Theatre, and, with Saturday evening's performance, the members of this organization will close their season. Mr. Pettitt's play is very neatly staged, and the various sensational scenes which follow each other in such rapid succession are presented to the best effect. Next week the Hanlon Brothers will begin an engagement with their entertaining performance of "Le Voyage en Suisse."

Last Monday evening was the 50th anniversary of the performance of "Iolanthe" at the Bijou. From present indications it is likely to run fifty nights longer.

Thatcher, Primrose & West's famously successful minstrel organization, which played in Salem last night, are to play a week's engagement at the Boston Theatre immediately following the McCullough season.

Miss Margaret Mather, whose coming is awaited with interest, is to make her first professional appearance in Boston a fortnight from to-morrow night, at the Park. She will be seen as the heroine of Verona. "Romeo and Juliet" will have a special cast, young Salvini appearing as the lover. This lady created such a furore in Rochester, New York, that at the matinee last Saturday, ladies' dresses were torn and several were injured in the crush.

John T. Raymond is to play a brief engagement at the Park in April, presenting his latest drama, "In Paradise," which the popular comedian seems to have made a success.

Young Mrs. Winthrop, the latest success at the Madison Square Theatre, is still in the height of its popularity. The acting is superb, the impersonation of Mrs. Agnes Booth being especially fine. If any of our readers visit New York, during the run of the play, we advise them by all means to witness it.

On Friday evening, Callender's Minstrels will give an entertainment in Mechanic Hall, Salem, under Moulton & Johnson. It is a mammoth company, being composed of Haverly's and three other of Callender's companies all combined. At one time there will be sixty persons on the stage, including a number of female voices, which is a peculiar feature of this company. Secure your tickets early.

Monday evening of next week Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence will appear in Mechanic Hall in Woolf's Comedy, the "Mighty Dollar." They will be supported by their own company, and it is needless to remind our readers that the famous successes of the Florences in the past, wherever they have appeared, cannot fail to be repeated in Salem.

Thos. W. Keene, the eminent tragedian, will appear in Salem Jan. 30th.

The Madison Square Theatre Company at Mechanic Hall, Salem, under the local management of Moulton & Johnson, presented that pleasing dramatic success entitled "The Professor," to a fair audience. The comedy sparkled with amusing situations and laughable scenes. Miss Mary Woolcott as "Daisy Brown" and Mr. J. O. Barrows as the Professor, were exceptionally fine.

It will be noted by our advertising columns that little Corinne with her company of artists, is to appear in the Peabody Institute on Thursday evening, Feb. 2d., under the management of H. Brooks Hooper. The patronage given to his first entertainment here, and the general approbation with which it was greated, augurs well for the success of this one. It is first class in every respect. Thousands of people have seen and wondered at little Corinne. We hope our people will turn out. Seats can be had at Starr C. Hewitt's.

A full house greeted Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels at Mechanic Hall, last evening, who laughed and applauded the performers at every point. The popularity of this troupe is evidently not on the wane.

THE LAW OF NEWSPAPERS.—It is an unwritten law well understood in journalism that no editor is under the slightest obligation to give a reason for his acceptance or non-acceptance of a manuscript. He is not called upon to write a private critique on the article to the author of it. His acceptance or rejection is an absolute and unquestionable fact. Among amateur writers this does not appear to be understood. All sub-editors and reporters understand that it is unjustifiable impertinence to ask the managing editor his reason for publishing or not publishing any matter submitted to his judgment. Outside writers and aspiring amateurs rarely seem to comprehend this truth, and their transgressions are largely from ignorance rather than intention. The nature of editorial work requires an absolute power of decision, in order to preserve the amities of the journal the editor conducts.—Boston Traveller.

Every man whose life is insured is vitally interested in seeing to it that his heirs are not to be cheated out of the money which his thoughtfulness, and often self-denial, has provided for them. As long as Mr. Clarke stands for the rights of women and children as against the greediness of corporations, he will lose nothing in the estimation of the people, however politicians may affect to construe his motives. Can Gov. Butler afford to make war on an insurance commissioner who is merely standing up for the rights of the weak and the helpless?—Boston Herald.

A German paper has a rather good story about a lady who, not feeling as well as she liked, went to consult a physician. "Well," said the Doctor, after looking at her tongue, feeling her pulse and asking her sundry questions, "I should advise you, yes, I should you—ahem!—to get married." "Are you single, Doctor?" inquired the fair patient, with a significant yet a modest smile. "I am, mein Fraulein; but it is not etiquette, you know, for physicians to take the physic they prescribe."

Poet's Corner.

A Lock of Flaxen Hair.

I have a lock of flaxen hair
  Wrapt in a tiny fold,
'Tis hoarded with a miser's care,
  'Tis dearer far than gold.
To other eyes of little worth,
  Yet precious unto mine;
For once, dear child, in life and health,
  It was a lock of thine.

The numbered hours pass slowly by;
  Days, weeks and months depart,
And still the vacant place remains
  Unchanged within the heart.
The loneliness is still the same,
  The same great want is there;
While memory loves to brood upon
  The simple lock of hair.

The cold winds seem to sigh more loud;
  When shades of evening fall;
The clock with more impressive sound,
  Ticks louder on the wall;
For now no artless words I hear,
  No smiling face I see,
No tones of childish mirth break forth,
  So dear to home and me.

'Tis past, 'tis gone, like some strange dream
  That lingers with the mind;
Some pleasant scene of happiness
  The heart hath left behind;
An atom from the fading dust,
  A relic of the past;
That tells of transient hopes and joys,
  Of things that could not last.

'Tis all that now remains of thee,
  Light of our home and hearth;
While sadly pass the silent hours,
  And dark the days come forth;
Yet still I keep it for thy sake,
  And guard it with fond care,
And oft I view, with throbbing heart
  Thy simple lock of hair.

Is it Wrong to Kiss?

"Is it wrong to kiss?" asked a timid maid
  Of the shimmering sands that border the deep,
But no answer she got, save the wavelets played
  A roundelay gay as they kissed her feet.

She asked the sun, but he only turned
  His saucy face from the Eastern sky,
And kissed her cheeks till they fairly burned,
  And a tear of vexation dimmed her eye.

She asked the wind as it came from the South
  The self-same question. The answer came,
For a zephyr sprang up and kissed her mouth
  And ruby red lips till they seemed aflame.

She asked a youth who had chanced along,
  And the moral question was solved in a trice;
For he answered: "O, maiden, it may be wrong,
  But"—here he proved it—"it's very nice!"

If the sea, and sun, and soft South wind,
  Kiss unmolested by bolt or ban,
Where the heart is eager, and lips and mind
  Are not reluctant, why shouldn't man?

Selected Story.

A Mid-Day Call at Miner's Flat.

BY CLARA SPAULDING BROWN.

It was a broiling day in midsummer at Miner's Flat. The scorching rays of an Arizona sun mercilessly sought out every nook and corner of the camp, unobstructed by shade of any kind. Alice Marriner thought of the hills and dells, the leafy nooks and rippling waters of her old home in New England, as she paused for a moment in the kitchen door, and looked out upon the broad and sterile plain where not a single tree relieved the monotony of the landscape. It was a dreary, uninviting spot for a home, and the quick tears sprang to Alice's eyes, as a wave of longing for something different—something better—than this in life swept over her. But they were speedily brushed away, and the girl turned back to her work in the sweltering little kitchen. "How foolish of me!" she thought. "Haven't I one of the very best brothers in the world? And does not he toil from morning till night to give me a home, and deny himself many a pleasure that he could enjoy but for me? What right have I to complain because we don't live in the pleasantest place in the world and have all the luxuries of a millionaire? Alice Marriner, thank your lucky stars that things are no worse, and hurry up your dinner. Henry will be here in thirty-five minutes as hungry as a bear."

So, with deft, quick movements, Alice set the potatoes over the fire, gave the savory-smelling roast in the oven a good basting and was "creaming" the butter and sugar for the pudding sauce, when tap, tap, came a knock at the front door.

"My goodness! Who's that, I wonder?" exclaimed Alice, hastily substituting a clean white apron for her floury kitchen one, and shutting the stove dampers that nothing might burn in her absence. She crossed the little sitting-room, which also served as dining-room and as Henry's bedroom—for this was the land of cot-beds and blankets—and opened the outer door.

"Te-he-he!" giggled Miss Laura—commonly and appropriately called Lolly—Fayette. "Was passing by and thought I'd call," with a glance that was calculated to be bewitching at her companion, a tall, broad-shouldered young fellow in a white suit and Panama hat.

"I'm glad to see you," said Alice, politely. "Walk in, please. Take this rocker, Lolly; and Mr. Harwood, allow me to relieve you of your hat."

"Distressingly warm, isn't it?" languished Miss Lolly, plying her fan with as much vigor as she could muster. "I never could have ventured out in such a sun, only Velma Sykes is going away on the noon stage, and I was positively obliged to see her about some things she is going to get for me in San Francisco. I met Mr. Harwood, and he was good enough to carry my umbrella. So I told him it was a good time to run in and see you."

A good time for them, perhaps, but not for Alice, who felt that her face was as red as a lobster with the heat of the cook stove, who had doubts about the smoothness of her hair, and knew that Henry could not wait many minutes for his dinner. But Alice was a real lady, and entertained her callers as gracefully as if their visit were not malapropos. It was not perfectly easy to do this, for Miss Fayette seemed bent upon showing up the discomforts of Alice's life, and Mr. Harwood had never been in the house before. He had not been in Miner's Flat many weeks and Alice's acquaintance with him was but slight.

"Mercy me! How thick the flies are," said Laura, dabbing at one which was endeavoring to get a taste of the "Magnolia Balm" upon her cheek. "I should think they'd eat you up."

"There are a great many this summer," replied Alice, "and we are late about getting our screen doors on. Brother is so tired when he gets home at night. Next week he'll be on the night shift and will have some leisure through the day."

"Oh, does he put them on? We always hire such jobs done, and then the season isn't half over before you are fixed up." Alice flushed but checked the answer that rose to her, reflecting that Laura did not realize how impertinent her language was—it was her way. But she wished Laura would not say such things before Mr. Harwood. He had given Laura a strange look when she made her last speech, and now sat gazing respectfully but critically at Alice.

"How did you enjoy the festival, Miss Marriner?" he enquired.

"Very well, indeed. Every one was so social, and I seldom go out in the evening."

"I don't see what you shut yourself up so for," interrupted Laura. "You're cooking and scrubbing all day, and I should think you'd want some recreation when night comes. You take in sewing, too, don't you?" with an inflection that plainly evinced her estimate of such menial employment.

"Yes, sometimes," replied Alice, "as I have a good sewing machine, and am anxious to help all I can."

"Well, if 'twas me I shouldn't distress myself as long as my brother could support me. It's too hot work. I should think you'd roast in a little bit of a house like this," glancing through the half open door at the kitchen fire.

"Is not it as hot for my brother as for me?" asked Alice, striving to remain composed. "And he is not strong. Indeed, that is why we came to this Southern country—the doctor said he must get away from the cold winters. Henry is just as good to me as he can be, and he is all that I have. I could not rest easy one minute if I did not make his burden as light as possible."

Alice's head was erect now, and her eyes shone with a steady, loving light.

Wallace Harwood looked at her admiringly. Laura Fayette saw it—it was the very thing she was working against. She had brought Wallace in here on purpose, knowing that he had been very favorably impressed with the gentle, modest girl whom he had met in company a few times, and determined to counteract this impression if she could do so, by showing up the poverty of the Marriner's, and Alice's "drudgery" at home.

Mr. Wallace Harwood was a young man of means, and good-looking withal—though that of means was of secondary importance—and Miss Laura had designs upon him.

"I declare, it's your dinner time, ain't it?" as innocently as if she had not been fully aware of it before she had knocked at the door. "Don't let us hinder you. For my part, I don't see how you can eat dinner at this time of day. We don't have ours until five o'clock."

"I confess that I prefer dinner at night myself," replied Alice. "But, when a man does hard work, he needs his most substantial meal in the middle of the day."

"That is so," said Mr. Harwood, "and I am not yet weaned from the Yankee customs."

"Then you are from New England?" ejaculated Alice, breathlessly. "From what part, pray?"

"From W———, Massachusetts."

"Ah! And I am from New Hampshire. But Massachusetts is almost equally familiar to me. I have cousins living near W———."

"May I ask their names?"

Laura was not at all pleased with Mr. Harwood's tone of interest, or with the turn in the conversation. She had been born and bred on the Pacific coast, and entertained a supreme contempt for everything outside of San Francisco. Alice's answer was checked by the arrival of her brother, who passed the muslin-draped window and proceeded to wash his face and hands at the bench by the kitchen door. Mr. Harwood arose and said: "Do please excuse us for bothering you at this hour. I will inquire about the cousins some other time. Come, Miss Fayette, let us give Miss Marriner a chance to give her brother his dinner."

"Not until I have introduced him to you," entreated Alice, who was in no wise ashamed of her miner brother, despite his blue flannel shirt and ugly overalls. "And won't you both stay to dinner?"

Laura declared that it would be utterly impossible for her to eat a morsel so soon after breakfast, and Mr. Harwood politely declined.

"Come in, Henry," called Alice. "I want to see you."

"Henry" appeared in the doorway—a sun-burned, honest-faced young man of about twenty-five, whose eyes lighted affectionately as they rested upon his sister. Miss Fayette bowed distantly, and Alice introduced the two young men to each other. They shook cordially, and presently Henry supplemented his sister's invitation for the callers to remain to dinner, while Alice, warned by the advancing hand of the clock, began to spread the table. The visitors still declined, however, and bowed themselves out, Laura urging Alice, with hypocritical ardor, to come and see her often. Alice flew around like a bird, and soon had the satisfaction of seeing her brother sitting at the table and doing ample justice to her cooking.

"Come, sis, sit down," said Henry; "there's enough on the table for three or four men now. Sit down and tell me all about your fine company. But did you have that smooch on your face when they were here?" pausing with a piece of meat half way to his mouth.

"What smooch?" Alice hastily arose and crossed to the little looking glass. "Oh, horrible!" as she beheld a sooty mark upon one temple. "However did get there? Oh! I know; it was when I stooped to baste the meat. I remember that I hit my forehead against the corner of the stove. Oh, I never, never will go to the door again until I have looked into the glass." Her overcharged feelings could no longer be controlled. She burst into tears. She liked Mr. Harwood so much, and what must he think of her? It was bad enough for Lolly Fayette to show him how different her life was from that to which he had been accustomed; but this was far worse, for this savored of untidiness, and Alice knew that every well-regulated man had a healthy horror of the least indication of a slovenly in a woman.

"Tut, tut, sis," said Henry, soothingly. "Don't cry. That's only a trifle."

"But it looks so—so—frowsiy," becoming incoherent, "like a—a—" Sobs finished the sentence.

"See here, Allie," cried Henry, jumping up and putting his arms around the quivering figure, "I can't have you feeling like this. You're all tired out and used up with the heat. You shan't work so any more. I'll get some one to help you before I'm a day older."

If Henry Marriner had been a strategist, instead of a great, warm-hearted fellow who loved his little sister dearly, he could not have hit upon a surer method of drying Alice's tears.

"Go back to your dinner, you foolish boy," she commanded; "and don't you dare to talk to me about 'help.' A pretty young woman I am if I can't do all there is to be done just for you and I. You are not afraid to soil your hands with work—why should I be above a paltry smooch on my face? Come, dear, try some of my pudding."

Laura Fayette was not quite sure her scheme had worked in the desired manner as she pursued her way homeward. Wallace accompanied her as far as the gate, but quietly declined her urgent invitation to lunch, and, lifting his hat, passed on. If she had chanced to be in the neighborhood of the Marriners just before dusk on the following day, she would have seen something which would have convinced her that her labors had been in vain—Wallace Harwood taking a reluctant leave of Alice Marriner, just outside the open door, after a pleasant call, when no discordant element had marred an earnest unconventional conversation.

Wallace had lost no time in inquiring about the "cousins near W——:" and judging by the frequency of his calls thereafter, and the length of his interviews with Miss Alice, there must have been a great deal to say about the distant relatives. It was not long before the residents of Miner's Flat became accustomed to seeing these two out riding together at the sunset hour, or walking arm-in-arm up and down the moonlit street, enjoying the cool breezes that seldom failed to blow over the camp at night, after a long and sultry day. It was patent to every one that the elegant young visitor had fallen "dead in love" with pretty, unpretending Alice Marriner. Some croaked that his attentions could mean no good—a rich, young fellow like him would never marry a miner's sister. But their doubts were set at rest one fine morning in autumn, when a certain marriage notice met their eyes in the Daily Silver Star, coupled with the announcement that the happy pair would leave Miner's Flat on the twelve o'clock stage for an extended tour through the Eastern States prior to settling in their new home in Southern California.

"It's so good of you, Wallace, dear," said the bride, "to decide that you will live in Santa Barbara so that Henry and I need not be separated for he would hardly dare venture into a cold climate yet. And it will be so nice for him to take charge of that ranch you have bought. He will soon be as strong as ever I know. I can't think how you ever, came to fancy such a plain, little mortal as I am, Wallace." The brown eyes looked up to his with a world of love and confidence in them.

"It was that mid-day call which did it," laughed Wallace. "I liked your appearance before, but that finished me."

"Pray, what constituted the charm, my lord? Could it have been the dusky smooch that ornamented my brow? Or was it my healthy color? Speak, I conjure you, and solve the mystic problem."

"I warn you not to be saucy," and Wallace gave his wife a specimen of the punishment in store for her. "It was one—both—everything. It was the vast difference between you and the ordinary girl of the period—the fashionable Miss who is too delicate to work, but able to dance all night; who despises honest poverty, but cares not from how disgraceful a source the money emanates which slips through her fingers so quickly. Pshaw! what do I want of a wife like that? what enjoyment could I derive from her companionship! What could I find in her to love? I have you, my treasure. God be thanked for that. I know your worth, and may I be worthy of you! I don't intend that these dear hands shall ever be employed in wearisome tasks, but it is a pleasant thought that, if it were necessary, you would work them to the bone for one you loved."

"Indeed I would," exclaimed Alice.

"I trust you will never be obliged to, my darling," replied Wallace, gravely and reverently. "But how different is Laura Fayette! As long as her father continues to prosper in the liquor business, she can play the lady; but if reverses come, as they so frequently do in these reckless frontier towns, where will she be? She served me one good turn, though unwittingly, when she brought me to your door on that scorching July day just four months ago. She paved the way for the happiness that I now enjoy, and we'll thank her for that, will we not, my dearest?"

"Actions speak louder than words," and Wallace Harwood was fully satisfied with his answer.—Detroit Free Press.

THE FIRST MACHINE PEGGED SHOE.—The historical collection of the Essex Institute, Salem, has received an interesting and valuable acquisition in the shape of the first shoe ever pegged by machinery. The article comes from the family of the inventor and patentee of the pegging machine, Sam'l Preston, Danvers. It is made of thick, coarse leather, and the sole is made fast by two rows of pegs. The shoe is accompanied by an autograph letter of Mr. Preston, detailing the story of its manufacture, and also by the letters patent bearing date, March, 1833. The letter is on parchment, and contains the signatures of Andrew Jackson as President, Edward Livingstone as Secretary of State, and R. B. Taney as Attorney-General, the last named subsequently becoming United States Justice.—Danvers Mirror.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at Spaulding's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

They have brought forth a doll baby which creeps, cries and sings, and no poor man has any further excuse for adding to the number of children who wear out clothes and devour potatoes.—Puck.

Book Notices.

The February number of DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE proves that this excellent publication is steadily progressing. The present issue is unusually varied and attractive, many of the poems and prose articles having especial reference to the season of St. Valentine. The articles most worthy of note are "Proposals of Marriage," "French Weddings," "Artistic Dressing," and "The Young Hero of Fashion." The department of fiction is supplied by several short stories, and the continuation of Mrs. Alexander's admirable serial, "The Admiral's Ward." "Current Topics" are discussed in a forcible and pleasant style, and every department contains much that will be found both useful and interesting. The present number is profusely illustrated, the frontispiece being a superb oil picture of Love, which is a fine work of art that will find many admirers.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE for February is a very beautiful number, that many persons will think it even better than the January one. The principal steel-plate, "Going to School," is especially cunning; and "Two Little Pussies," printed on tint, is only less so. The most striking story in the number, one of the most striking we have read for a long while, is "The Snake Charmer." The price of this magazine is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs, so that every lady can afford to subscribe for it; and certainly no lady, no family, ought to be without it. Its enormous circulation, in which, we believe, it excels all the other lady's books combined, can alone explain why so splendid a magazine can be furnished at so low a price. Specimens are sent gratis to those wishing to subscribe, or to get up clubs; and especially handsome premiums are given for getting up clubs. Address, PETERSON'S MAGAZINE, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

The second part of "The Belle of Australia" appears in the February number of BALLOU'S MAGAZINE, and the author, Mr. William H. Thomes, who wrote "The Gold Hunters," "Life in the East Indies," and so forth, appears to have got his hero in a very uncomfortable position, surrounded by policemen, with a web woven around him which he will find hard to break. We see no way to escape. It appears to be marry or an arrest, and we do not know which he will choose. Beside "The Belle" there is such nice matter as "The Lakes of Maine," "After a New-Year's Party," "Through Faith," "The Bleak World," "The Path that Leads Me Back to You," "The Haven of Rest—Music." Ballou's is published at 23 Hawley Street, Boston, at only $1.50 per year, or 15 cents a single copy. If your nearest newsdealer does not keep it, ask him to order it, and he will do so, or send 10 cents for the January number, and see what a nice family magazine it is. It is handsomely illustrated.

The NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for February opens with a symposium in which six prominent theologians give expression to their views upon the question of the "Revision of Creeds." Prof. Alexander Winchell, in an article entitled "The Experiment of Universal Suffrage," institutes a profound inquiry into the essential conditions of stable popular government, which he finds to be, substantially, virtue and intelligence; but these conditions, he maintains, are absolutely unattainable under our existing political system. "The Political Situation" is the joint title of two articles, the one by Horatio Seymour, the other by Geo. S. Boutwell, who offer their respective views upon the causes of the recent overthrow of the Republican party. An article by Dr. D. A. Sargent, on "Physical Education in Colleges" treats a subject of prime importance to the welfare of the youth in our higher educational institutions. Finally, there are two articles on "The Standard Oil Company," Senator Camden of West Virginia defending that corporation against its assailants, and John C. Welch setting forth the reasons for condemning it as a dangerous monopoly. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York.

The February ATLANTIC continues two of the features which made the January number one of the most remarkable ever issued. It contains the second part of Longfellow's dramatic poem "Michael Angelo." "The Ancestral Footstep" is concluded with a chapter so enthralling that it will deepen the regret that Hawthorne did not live to complete a story containing so many elements of curious interest. Bradford Torrey contributes a remarkably interesting paper entitled "With the Birds on Boston Common." G. E. Woodberry writes with unusual discrimination and appreciation of Walter Savage Landor. Henry L. Nelson furnishes a very timely article entitled "Some Truths about the Civil Service." Maria Louise Henry discusses with intelligence "The Morality of Thackeray and George Eliot." Richard Grant White contributes a paper of unique interest on "Stage Rosalinds." Prof. E. R. Sill, of California, discusses trenchantly, yet candidly, "Herbert Spencer's Theory of Education," H. H., who has recently visited the Pacific Coast, writes of "Puget Sound" and its vicinity. The number contains several poems, reviews of new books, and short, bright essays in the Contributors' Club. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

It is during these days of business that a clergyman, on selecting a chapter of the Bible to read in church, first looks at the end of the last verse to make sure that no patent medicine advertisement is hitched on.—Puck.

WANTED SPIRITUAL AID.

The Rev. Mr. Eggle sat in his study, preparing a sermon on the "Divine mission of Moses," when Bill Blukle entered without ceremony. Blukle's face did not wear a happy expression.

"How do you do, sir," said the minister arising. "What is your name, please ?"

"I am Bill Blukle, the boxer of Dry Fork. I don't reckon you recollect me."

"No, I don't think that I ever had the pleasure of meeting you before."

"Some time ago," said the visitor, seating himself and wiping his face on a tidy, with a cat design, worked by a young lady and presented to the reverend gentleman, "you came out to Dry Fork and got up a revival."

"Yes, I remember."

"Yes, I reckon so. You persuaded me to come up to the bench, and I staid till you pulled me through. I shouted as loud as anybody and done everything I could for the benefit of the concern."

"Oh yes, I remember now ; it was a bright conversion."

"And when I jined the church you talked to me a long time about the wickedness of the world. You said that when ever I was weak, to pray and I would receive strength. Wall. the other day I had occasion to fight a nigger. He was too strong for me and done me up pretty bad. Remembering what you said, I went off and prayed for more strength. Then I tackled the nigger agin, but he whupped me. Then, thinkin' that I hadn't prayed with enough heat, I prayed agin, and agin tackled the nigger, but he got away with me. Then I found out the nigger had been prayin' too. Now sir, I want to know if a nigger is to have more influence than I've got. I know that he got strength, for each time he hit me harder. It struck me that I didn't get the right kind of religion, and as my reputation as a boxer depends on whuppin' that nigger, I thought I'd come in and git you to pray for me. Wish you'd represent how important it is for me to whup the fellow. Throw in a few words about my standin' among the neighbors, and I don't mind if you say that I've allers voted the straight ticket."

"I cannot grant your absurd request, my friend," exclaimed the minister. "Such a thing is unheard of among civilized people."

"You don't seem to git at the spirit of the thing," said the visitor, leaning over and spitting on the tidy which had fallen on the floor. "But can't you write me out a prar ? Jest say how important it is for me to git away with the nigger. Throw in something about good crops and thankfulness and many blessings, and wind up by requesting strength enough to lay the nigger out."

"You shock me, sir, and I greatly desire to be left alone."

"Wall, parson, I'll have to try my hand on you, I reckon. Get down and pray for me or I'll have to mix with you. You led me into this thing and you've got to help me out. Git down there now and send up a few petitions."

"You are blasphemous, sir. Leave my presence."

"I'll have to jump on you, cap'n."

"Are you going ?"

"I say I'll have to mingle with you."

"All right," exclaimed the minister, and pulling out a drawer he seized a pistol. "Don't be in a hurry," remarked the preacher, cocking the weapon.

"Yas, I've got to go. Reckon I'll have to take out a license to preach before I can git away with the nigger. "Good day," and the minister was alone. Smiling blandly he returned the pistol and resumed his sermon.—Arkansaw Traveler.

WORN BY BUSY FEET.

There are many places in New York where the constant tread of human feet has worn the pavement. The granite steps of the City Hall show large hollows at the most frequented places. At the turning points of the interior stone stairways there are deep depressions, showing how those passing up and down have wheeled near the railing. It is a very common thing in the city to see stairways of wood or stone shod with iron. Frequently the iron plates become worn so smooth that they have to be chipped or renewed. So great has been the wear on elevated railway steps that many experiments have been tried to obtain the necessary hardness without slipperiness. The result has been the adoption of a combination of iron and India rubber. Some of the steps of the Cooper Institute, the Custom House, the Sub-Treasury, and even the new Post office show marks of busy feet. The flagstones in Broadway, Bowery, Grand, Wall and other busy streets are polished by the constant rubbing of feet, and the curbstones where people linger while waiting for vehicles to pass are worn smooth in many places. There are curious marks of foot wear along the marble step of Stewart's down-town store. A deep furrow is worn lengthwise in it. This has been mainly worn by passers by in the street who have taken a fancy to walk along the step.—N. Y. Sun.

Fishermen who live along the Mediterranean shores say the digging of Panama and Corinth canals is likely to influence the future character of the finny tribes in the waters which these canals will join. They point to their own experience since the Suez was completed. Not a single shark was formerly known in the Mediterranean, a fact which made the fish supply of that sea inexhaustable, but sharks now migrate into it freely from the Red Sea and Indian Ocean, and make sad havoc of fish that have a market value.

Genius can never despise Labor.

LINCOLN READS A POEM.
Honest Old Abe Entertains his Cabinet with a Little Quotation.

"Now, gentlemen, you all have more or less poetry in your souls; listen to this," and Abraham Lincoln, then President, rose from his chair, in his office in the White House, and read, in trembling tones, which indicated his own profound appreciation of it, Dr. O. W. Holmes' "Last Leaf," of which the following are two verses:

"They say that in his prime,
Ere the pruning knife of time
Cut him down;
Not a better man was found
By the crier in his round
Through the town.

Now the mossy marbles rest
On the lips that he had pressed
In t eir bloom;
And the names he loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb."

Mr. Michael Guilfoyle, of Binghamton, N. Y., is not as old as the venerable Boston citizen of whom the poet wrote with such tender pathos, yet he is more than three score and ten. "For the past eight of those years," he writes, "I have been a perfect cripple from rheumatism, hobbling about as best I could with my cane. I took PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and am now supple and strong as a gymnast. There is no trace of the disease left about me."

Mr. R. W. Mosher, wholesale druggist, of Binghamton, writes Messrs. HISCOX & Co , of New York—Proprietors of the Tonic—certifying to Mr. Guilfoyle's declaration.

Having all the properties of any preparation of ginger, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is a remedy of infinitely greater range and power. It cures all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood or imperfect digestion. Dyspepsia (and all its consequences), Malarial Fevers, Sick Headache, Kidney troubles, Bronchitis, and common Coughs and Colds, vanish at its touch. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Larger size the cheaper.

The MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY for January opens with a table of contents, brighter and fresher than ever before, presenting an answer through that learned scholar and antiquary, Dr. John Gilmary Shea, to what might appear at first as a singular question, "Where are the remains of Columbus?" A painstaking and diligent Virginia writer, Alexander Brown, sketches the noble career of Lord De La Warr, and exhibits him in his true relation to Virginia, of which he was the founder. His article is accompanied by a portrait of De La Warr on steel. Prof. Adams concludes his bright, strong and original discussion, "Plymouth Rock Restored," in which the founders of Plymouth appear in a new, fresh and true light. Of translations there is a letter by Columbus, made from the Spanish original found in the Carta de Indias, a volume that cannot be found in half a dozen libraries in America. This number also contains a profusion of Notes and Queries of interest to all classes of readers. The literary notices, as usual are very serviceable in pointing out the merits or demerits of works that many have no time to decide by personal investigation. An examination of this number will convince the most critical that the Magazine is able to meet the demands of historical and general readers of the day. The Magazine is conducted in a broad, national spirit, aiming to do justice to all parts of the country, and now begins afresh with the hearty endorsement of many of the best scholars and students of American History. A. S. Barnes & Co., of New York, are the publishers.

Unity of action, concord, sympathy and goodfellowship are admirable traits in human character; but they will not heal our physical infirmities. Catarrh, for example, stubbornly resists their effects or influence. In fact this malady withstands all of its would-be destroyers, except Ely's Cream Balm. "Solitary and alone" this Balm stands as the only recognized and infallible specific for catarrh. "For fifteen years," says J. B. Chase, St. Denis Hotel, B'way and 11th St., N. Y., "I have been greatly annoyed with a disgusting catarrh. My sense of smell, not to mention other troubles, became much impaired. A thorough use of Ely's Cream Balm has cured me of these troubles." It is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. Only 50 cents a package.

FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE.—The February number is promptly on our table, with its usual manifold attractions, literary and artistic. Among the prominent articles are: "Whisperers," by the Editor, Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage; a continuation of De Leon's "The American Pilgrim in Palestine;" a continuation also of "Religious Denominations in the United States—What is Congregationalism?" by Rev. Dr. Tarbox; Alfreton Hervey treats of Beethoven, one of the "Sacred Musicians of the Ninth Century," etc, etc. In the department of fiction "Justice Warren's Daughter" and "Weighed and Wanting" are continued, and Julia H. Thayer, Helen W. Pierson, Mrs. Alexander and other popular writers contribute short stories, sketches, essays, etc. There are some excellent poems, many of them beautifully illustrated, and in the Home Pulpit is a characteristic sermon by Dr. Talmage, "Hospitality." We can only refer generally to the abundance of good things in this number, which is elaborately embellished. Single copies 25 cents: $3 a year postpaid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

She admitted to her mother that the young man had made a very strong impression on her. "Yes," said the old lady, "I can see where the impression mashed that lace flat as a clean napkin. Don't let it happen again."—Syracuse Times.

We are now publishing a series of Standard and Popular works that we believe will be found the cheapest and best books ever made. They are all printed from large, clear type, on good paper, and very attractively bound in cloth, making them an ornament for any Library.

We are also publishing a new series under the name of "Lovell's Library" that gives all the best Current and Standard Fiction at prices equally as low as in any other form. Instead, however, of the large quarto broadsides we have adopted a neat 12mo size, with handsome cover, using large, clear type, mostly long primer, and making each number worthy of preservation.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

THE RE-ELECTION of Senator Hoar is a triumph for the machinery of the republican party. It is by no means a vindication—certainly not in the sense which he and his ardent supporters appear to regard it. We do not think the people of Massachusetts feel that he was unjustly attacked or that his election was necessary to show to the world their confidence in him. But we do think that the party, on the whole, are satisfied with the result; that in spite of a few mistakes, they are willing to continue him as a representative of the State, in the Senate of the United States.

At the same time, it cannot be disguised that there were many republicans, not only in the Legislature, but throughout Massachusetts, who did not favor his election. This number was diminished somewhat by the argument so freely used that Butler was opposed to him, and in order to rebuke Butler, Hoar must be elected. We think this was used for a great deal more than it was worth, and while it is in a measure true that the democrats and even Butler have preferred Long to Hoar, it must not be forgotten that the action of Hoar, by his vote on the river and harbor bill, and more especially by his defense of it, gave Gov. Butler his entering wedge in this State and drew many republicans to his banner during the campaign.

We think, however, that all true republicans will acquiesce in the choice, whatever their personal preferences, and in this connection we regret very much the attack made upon Gen. Cogswell, of Salem, the acknowledged leader of the Long party in the house. It is possible that Gen. Cogswell may be in error as to the proportion of his republican constituency, who were opposed to Hoar, and it is equally possible that a larger number are in favor of Gov. Long than are willing openly to admit it. At all events, it was well known before the election that Gen. Cogswell would cast his vote for Long, and all talk about his being left at home had it been known, is foolishness. We are more inclined to believe that the issue of his and others election did not have reference to the Senatorial contest at all; if Gen. Cogswell believes that other representatives would have been left, had their constituents anticipated they would vote for Hoar, it is simply a matter of opinion, and as we understand it, so expressed by him. To that opinion he is rightfully entitled. We think in few cases, if any, was the issue made on that point, and therefore the attack on him is all the more unjust. It is but the beginning of the opposition which we expect to see developed towards him, as a possible candidate for representative in this district to Congress, to succeed Col. Stone. As far as our cotemporary, the Salem Gazette, is concerned, it is easy to see whence it arises, as it is no secret that editor Horton has aspirations in that quarter.

ANOTHER FREE advertising dodge is being persistently pushed in this vicinity and through the State, and for the sake of the advertising agents who are reliable and prompt in their dealings, it is to be regretted that so many publishers are willing to swallow the bait thrown out by irresponsible parties. The advertisement we refer to comes from the "Women's Medical Institute" of Buffalo, N.Y., through Osgoodby & Co., who claim to be general advertising agents. As near as we can learn they are not such at all; but simply agents for this Institute, and the programme is so neatly arranged that printed extracts from one of the papers there, are sent to ease the consciences of such publishers as may be in doubt as to their reliability. Here is one of them: "We can state that the firm is entirely reliable and business contracts with them will be fulfilled to the letter." Thinking the matter worth a little investigation we wrote to the paper in question, asking them if they were prepared to vouch for the statement which appeared in their columns, and we received the following significant reply:

"As regards the recommend, all we have to say is that we were compensated for publishing same."

Signed, - - - -

P. S. The enclosed notice is the only transaction we had with them.

This, coupled with the fact that they decline to pay for any advertising in advance, is assurance sufficient for us that publishers who accept their advertisements will find them on a par with those of Dr. Richmond, of St. Joseph, Mo., and Hermon Conant & Co., of New York, both of whom ought to be well known in this state.

THE OPPOSITION to the printing of extra copies of Gov. Butler's message comes from no fear on the part of the Republican party of its contents being known. The origin of the request for the extra number was simply buncombe, there is probably not a voter in Massachusetts, at all interested in the issues of the election, who has not read it in the Boston daily press, which published it entire. We do not believe the necessity for extra numbers exists. If it did, we should by all means favor its circulation. To those who will investigate the majority of the charges made in it, the message itself is the strongest argument against the assumption of Butler. The only difficulty is; that many of his followers, will be led to believe his statements, clothed as they are in such specious language. They will not take the trouble if they have the inclination, to look into the matter for themselves. The only remedy for this on the part of the Republican party, is to keep constantly before the people the undisputed statement of their falsity. Fortunately for the party, there is no need for argument on many points. It is a clear case of veracity, and in this case the proof is emphatically against Gen. Butler.

THE BILL for the reduction of postage on letters to two cents for each half ounce, has passed both houses of Congress, and only awaits the signature of the President. This is assured, as it is understood that President Arthur is favorable to such a bill. We are glad that Congress has thus early shown some indication of attention to the desires of the people. This must lead necessarily to the reduction in price of other matter transported through the mails, and will lead to the use of letter postage in many cases where the postal is now employed. We anticipate that, even with this reduction, the department will be self sustaining in a few years. The law goes into effect July 1, 1883. Until which time, please put three cent stamps on your letters.

THE WESTERN Union Telegraph Co., have boasted that they cared nothing for competition, and that the telephone instead of being an injury was beneficial to their business. But in spite of this, they have lately made a reduction to 25 cents for ten lines, to all points in New England. Competition is a good thing for the public, as far as this company is concerned. We hope it will lead to prompter and more efficient service on its part. There is much need of improvement in this direction.

AS WE SURMISED the temperance leaders are not letting Gov. Butler alone. His failure to mention the question in his inaugural has brought out a long open letter to the governor from Rev. Daniel Dorchester, in which he tries to impress upon the mind of his Excellency the untold evils of the liquor traffic. It certainly must have been a surprise to some of his prohibition supporters when they found their pet theory so utterly ignored.

The constituents of ninety-five members wanted to read the message, but they are to be deprived of that privilege unless they can secure a copy of the Globe of Jan. 5, where it was printed in full.—Boston Globe.

This is bosh. Does the Globe flatter itself that no other Boston daily published the message? If there is such a demand for the message, why don't the Globe print some extra copies and distribute them for the good of the cause?

The comet can still be seen on very clear evenings southeast of Arion, after 11 o'clock. It is rapidly disappearing, however, and having seen enough of our politics in an "off year" will not return again until A. D. 2075, or about the time a Democratic president is elected.

West Peabody Farmers' Club.

The regular meeting of the West Peabody Farmers' Club was held on Monday evening of this week. The meeting was called to order at 7.40 P. M., by Mr. Taylor, the president; opened with singing by the Chorus Club, "The Captain with his whiskers took a sly glance at me." The usual reading of the report of the last meeting was on motion dispensed with. The President then introduced Mr. Angell, who spoke on the following subject, "The relation of the Animals that can Speak to those that are Dumb." He made an apology for not feeling as well as usual, and then went on to say that he had spent the last fifteen years in this work, part of the time in New England, part in foreign countries and part in the South. Some writers on this subject say that dumb animals have a further existence. Lamartine, Agassiz, Rev. Joseph Cook and others believe this. A man in New York left $15,000 to the Society for the protection of dumb animals, because he thought they would go to a better place after death; the heirs disputed the will, but the Judge sustained it. He also spoke of the uses of horses, the foolishness of blinders on them, and pulling up steep hills with check reins. Check reins are going out of use; they are not used to such an extent in Scotland and England as they are in America, especially in the United States. Horses cared for by other countries when wounded in battle, were left to die of starvation on our battle fields in the late strife. Havens for lost dogs, cats and other animals are in some countries, but none of the kind in our own land. Six hundred clergymen in England preached the gospel of kindness to dumb animals, and prizes for essays on the subject were offered.

In Germany there are 127 societies of 150,000 members, and of youth and children, 7,000 members. Societies for this purpose have also been formed in Russia and France, in the latter place, lessons are taught in the public schools on kindness to animals, and the children in the Catholic churches when admitted to communion, promise among other things to be kind to dumb animals. Conventions are held in Europe from time to time, one lately held in London, being attended by at least 10,000 persons. Another held at Munich was largely attended, at which I was present. Also spoke to an audience at the residence of Baroness Burditt Coutts. The first society was formed in this country about ten years ago in New York City, Geo. Bancroft, Peter Cooper and other men of note, being members. Mr. Bergh has been the head of this society for some years, and although some peoble think he is poor, yet he is said to be worth about $2,000,000.

In Boston, the first society was formed about six years ago, since which time many of the abuses existing in that city in regard to the treatment of horses have been mitigated. Troughs for watering purposes have been placed in various parts of the city, and extra horses have been placed near all the hills, by the horse railroad companies, to assist in pulling loaded cars up the incline, where formerly two horses tugged and strained under their heavy loads, and the fear of the law also acts as a restraint in some cases.

A poor horse staggering under a heavy load at last refused to draw, and the inhuman driver swore at him. "Why don't you whip him?" said a bystander. "Why don't I whip him! how do I know that some of that blamed society is not standing in the crowd," and thanks to that fear, the poor horse was saved a beating. Dog fights and other cruel practice in regard to other animals have been stopped, and one man, Harry Jennings, driven out of the city, and dares not return as he has an indictment hanging over him.

The Society have distributed two million copies of pamphlets on the subject of Humanity to dumb animals. Prizes have been given to hack drivers and others for essays on the best way to treat horses. Placards have also been placed at the foot of many hills with the notice "Please uncheck your horses going up hill," and have investigated 30,000 cases of cruelty to animals, and the last and most important work has been the establishing of "Bands of Mercy," over 100 being already formed in Massachusetts. Gov. Long, Wendell Phillips and many other prominent and eminent men are members; it only costs two cents for a card of membership, and six cents for a badge, both of which are unique and fine specimens of handiwork. Two and one-half to three millions have been spent in this state for charitable purposes, 99 1-2 per cent. has been used for human beings, and 1-2 of 1 per cent. has been spent towards alleviating the hardships of dumb animals. When the Society needed funds, seventeen policemen were placed at its disposal, who for three weeks canvassed the city, with marked success. Among the most liberal givers was Mrs. Appleton, and lately her daughter has remembered the Society in a very liberal manner. At the last fair the Society held, there were 2,000 ladies on its committee, and the Boston Truckmen's Association placed its funds at the disposal of the society. One of the members of the Truckmen's Association, lately deceased, recognizing the worth of the society, has left a legacy to help on its good work.

The speaker spoke also of the cruelty to animals on the cars, and said that he has known 1077 dead animals taken out at one time, and 833 at another, the result of starvation and over-crowding; and 1000 bruised and broken limbed animals slaughtered and sold in the market, thereby sending disease and death into many a home where the meat from them has been used. He said it was an established fact that meat from an animal abused and ill treated before death was sure to breed disease and death in the persons consuming it. The meat from a well animal and a sickly one can be exposed side by side in the market and the difference cannot be detected. Is there any way of stopping this? yes; proper laws, and cars built expressly for the transportation of animals is one way. Why do animals need protection? Because multitudes are slaughtered inhumanly and outrageously by man.

Brown Sequard, Agassiz and others, say fish should be instantly killed when taken out of the water, and then it is most beneficial when eaten. The horse is a friend and companion to man, and the speaker related many anecdotes of horses. Farmers should not leave their cattle exposed to cold while they sit by warm fires. Many lives of animals are sacrificed by man in the interests of science; one man in Columbus, O., has taken 3,000 lives in this cruel manner, and it is clearly shown that there is not the least reason for this outrage.

The speaker spoke of the fearful rate at which crime was increasing in this country, and that it was mostly young and intelligent men who were filling our prisons, and he thought the remedy was teaching the children kindness to animals. More love to animals brings more love to fellowmen; by following this life of mercy, the time will come when there will be peace on earth, good will to men. If animals are God's creatures, the care of them is doing God's service. The speaker closed with a call for a show of hands from those who wished to form a band of Mercy, and all hands went up; he left cards and badges to form a band with the President, and hoped he would receive a favorable letter on the subject from Peabody.

Mr. King then spoke as follows:—I am almost ashamed to say that this is the first lecture I ever heard on cruelty to animals, and he was much interested. He had experience in carrying cattle from the Canada train, and old drivers who have been in the business for some years try to see properly after their cattle; spoke of crowded cars, mutilated cattle unfit to be eaten, had seen many killed in transit and thinks they were used as food, and said he had no doubt they spread disease. Mr. King related many incidents of cruelty to animals that had come under his own personal observation, among which was the following: About 20 years ago he saw a man threshing who struck an ox with the flail; the ox was killed that very day, and where the man struck, it was all bloodshot under the hide. The man was fined $10; it does not pay to flog an animal. Mr. King was followed by Mr. Spaulding, who said he did not believe that cruelty ever resulted in good; kindness always results in good, there can be no question as to that, and mercy should be shown to every creature that God has made.

The speaker spoke of cows, saying that most of the cows of the members of the Farmers' Club were pretty well fed and cared for. He told of an old horse that is kept for the good it has done to some of the ancestors of David G. Upton, who would not sell the horse to be shot in even a humane manner for its weight in gold. Farmer Skinner also has a horse sound in limbs and mind, that shows good care and use although an old horse. He had never listened to a more practical or more interesting lecture than the one he had heard to-night. After Mr. Spaulding's remarks, the meeting ended with a song by the Chorus Club. The next subject was announced, "How does the New England homes compare with those of the west," to be opened by Jas. P. King, Esq.,

The agents of Barnum and Forepaugh were both in Haverhill on Wednesday, says the Gazette, and rearranged their programme for the coming season. By an arrangement between the parties the greatest show on earth goes west at the beginning of the season, and Forepaugh comes east.

An English workingman, just past the middle age, found that his pipe, which for many years had been a great comfort to him, was beginning to seriously affect his nerves. Before giving it up, however, he determined to find out if there was no way by which he might continue to smoke without feeling its effects to an injurious extent. He accordingly wrote to a medical journal and was recommended to fill the bowl of the pipe one-third full of table salt and press the tobacco hard down upon it, as in ordinary smoking. The result was very satisfactory. During the process of smoking the salt solidifies while remaining porous, when the hardened lump is removed at the end of a day's smoking it is found to have absorbed so much of the oil of tobacco as to be deeply colored. The salt should be renewed daily.—N. Y. Sun.

Rev. Dr. Bartol, of Boston, in a recent sermon, handled without gloves the false statements of Gov. Butler in reference to our state asylums and boards of charity. Taken in connection with the statistics of ex-governor Talbot, whose knowledge of these matters can not be disputed, it has been clearly shown that the message to the legislature was not only a missstatement in regard to these institutions, but manifested either wilful perversion or ignoance on Butler's part. So clear is this, that no attempt at defense has been made by his friends. Dr. Bartol's closing sentences, containing as they do an eulogium of Massachusetts fit to be read by those who have admired that of Webster, we give below:

"It is in the power of no man or party either to stain or cleanse the Massachusetts shield! It is good stuff; it will wash and never rust. It is of metal old and pure, proof against vitrol or mud; and whoever thinks to scour would better uphold for all to walk in its light and be purged with its purity, which any polluter has none of his own to match. Alas! it is yet for every one a task to live up to its declaration of equal rights. Under that 'eternal blazon,' better and holier than we are, flashing rebuke into the face of every late convert from a pro-slavery view, dazzling his eyes and opening his path, let us walk and work! Our state? The commonwealth is not ours! We are its. The vessel we are on board of, who of us owns? It is the ship of state; and not captain or pilot for the moment in charge of the helm can determine its port, but only obediently lay its course at the owners' will; and who the owners are ask not of a living, transient incumbent or supercargo, or crew alone, but of the dead heroes and martyrs writing their covenant in blood; from the first settlers, men, women, and children, perishing by the wild climate or the more savage man to the last soldiers and officers that lay cold on the battle-field, lifeless in seeming, but living forever in a redeemed country's memory, as they are alive in heaven indeed."

Committee on Entertainment—Wm. J. Roome, Chairman; J. O. Buxton and J. B. Reith. Committee on Printing—John O. Buxton, Chairman; T. O. Bartlett. Committee on Tickets—F. O. Parker and others as published last week. Committee on Refreshments—Wm. H. Hildreth, Chairman; Engineer C. G. Folsom, William H. Joll, Steamer 1, E. H. Shannon, Steamer 2, Joseph Miller, H. & L., Frank E. Mason, Hose 1, G. Frank Currier, Hose 2, Jesse Barrett, Hose 3, H. G. Upton, Hose 4, T. D. Murray, Hose 5. The company outside of the Peabody fire department selling the largest number of tickets will receive a pair of silver torches. For the Committee on Contributions see advertisment in another column.

Mr. J. B. Reith received the other day a letter from his friend, Mr. Chas. Hale, who it will be remembered enlisted in the Regular Army some two years ago. He is at present located at Fort Assinaborne, Montana Territory. The nearest place is Fort Benton, some seventy miles away. He writes that he likes the country very much, and will probably make his home in the West after his discharge from the army. With the service of Uncle Sam he is not quite so well pleased. He has been in seven expeditions against the Indians and had several narrow escapes and as he expressed it, "his hair is still on his head." Good wages are paid and help is scarce. The buildings are of brick and they have a theatre, chapel, bowling alley, water works, etc. It has cost the government four hundred thousand dollars and is not yet completed. The Fort is garrisoned by eight companies of infantry and two squads of the cavalry, Mr. Hale belonging to the latter. There are about 500 enlisted men in all. He has ten nights in bed between guards and drills twice a week. The only amusement they have is buffalo hunting. Mr. H. wished to be remembered to his friends in town.

A fatal accident occurred on the Salem and Lowell Railroad in this town, last Saturday morning. A special freight train containing twenty-one bark cars passed through the town and shortly afterwards the mutilated remains of a young man named Albert Jordan, twenty-two years of age, were found beside the tracks. No one witnessed the accident, but it is supposed that he was on the top of the cars and while stepping from one to the other, he missed his footing and fell between them. When found the head and body were some eight or ten feet from the legs and feet, he having been severed in twain. A large crowd collected and medical examiner Geo. S. Osborne viewed the remains and ordered their removal by Undertaker Fallon. The unfortunate victim was a native of Eaton, Canada, and had been employed by the road about six months. He was not married, but had friends in Lowell to whom his remains were sent, and yesterday they were sent to his Canadian home.

As the year closes there are many interesting statistics in relation to local happenings. By the courtesy of our town clerk we were permitted to look over the Register of deaths and marriages. The number of deaths in town during the year 1882, was 188; 96 males, 92 females. Of this number 19 were over 80 years of age, one was 90 years old and another 95 years. 58 were ten years old or younger. Out of the whole number, 99 were born in Peabody. The number of marriages in Peabody during the year 1882, was 91. In 47 of these both the contracting parties were of Peabody. 15 Peabody brides found husbands elsewhere; 16 Peabody men were wedded to ladies from other places. 12 couples from other places were married in Peabody, and 18 couples were married by out of town clergymen.

The Salem & South Danvers Oil Company elected the following officers for 1883: Directors, Daniel Varney, Wm. H. Little, John Culliton, James Braden, W. B. Richardson, Nathaniel A. Horton and C. H. Weston; Clerk and Treasurer, Nathaniel G. Symonds.

So. Peabody Notes.—Mr. H. N. Batchelder will remove into his house, recently purchased by him, this week.

Mr. David Putnam from N. J., is making a short visit at his mother's on Lynnfield street.

Edward E. Taylor is reported quite sick caused by nervous prostration.

The lathers have the vestry of the new church nearly ready for the masons.

J. B. Newhall is storing about 300 tons of ice in his ice house in the rear of his residence on Washington street.

The next rehearsal of the Salem Oratorio will be on Thursday evening, Feb. 1. The Society has accepted an invitation from the Lowell Society to present with them the oratorio of "Redemption," which both societies have under rehearsal at the present time. The concert will probably be given the last of March in Lowell.

Geo. H. Little is putting in one of his injectors at the Wilson Brother's tannery on Lowell street to be used in wetting the bark as it is conveyed to the leaches. This is not the first time this injector has been put to this use, and there has been considerable demand for them for that purpose.

One more rich treat for our Citizens. The second entertainment in H. B. Hooper's course will take place at the Institute, Friday evening, Feb. 2d. This will no doubt bring out a very fashionable audience, as this little artist has been creating quite a sensation among the elite of the largest cities.

A committee of three from Derry, N. H. were in town Saturday to look at the old hand engine. The town is about to organize a fire department and will use good judgment if they purchase one of our "crack" machines. The prices asked for the engines by the engineer is $400 each for the Torrent and Volunteer, and $900 for the S. C. Bancroft.

Wm. Martin, of the firm of Martin & Dunney, received a painful wound in the eye last Wednesday. As he was coming out of his store on Wallis street, his partner started in with a pair of skids and as Mr. Martin was one or two steps below, the skids struck him in the eye, and William will probably have to wear mourning about that eye for the next few weeks.

Notwithstanding the English sparrows are considered a nuisance by many, at this season they make things cheerful and it is very pleasant to watch the little fellows. Nearly every pleasant morning large numbers of them may be seen on the edge of the brook near Railroad avenue. No matter how cold the weather is they are there every morning to take their bath. As many as seventy-five have been counted there at once.

Last Thursday a man named Marco from this town, was over to the river where several of his companions were eeling, when he broke through the ice and was plunged into the water and under the ice, but very luckily came to the surface, and was rescued by his companions, but was almost lifeless when brought to the shore. He was resuscitated shortly afterwards and no serious results are reported from his prolonged cold bath.

Postmaster Randall has received the following letter from the P. O. Dept: "I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2d inst., and, in reply, to inform you that the name of Peabody, Mass., has been placed upon the list of additional international money-order offices, to be put in operation on or about the 1st of April, 1883. The books, blanks and instructions necessary for the commencement of international money-order business at your post office will in due time be furnished by the department."

The entertainment at the residence of Mrs. J. B. Thomas on Oak street, last Thursday evening for the benefit of the piano fund of the Baptist church, was very successful and netted the ladies about thirty dollars. During the evening the company was favored with several solos by Miss Carrie Thomas of Lynn, also singing and instrumental music by Misses Hannah and Grace Thomas. The choir lent efficient aid and the singing of Father Kemp's hymns was a pleasing feature. Ice cream and cake were freely disposed of, while the agreeable host and hostess and their assistants made the occasion very pleasant to all present.

A party of neighbors and friends from Lynn and Lynnfield, visited Mr. and Mrs. John Horner of West Peabody, and gave them a very pleasant surprise last Thursday evening. The evening was socially spent and the company were entertained by music and singing by Mr. Miner Gray and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Drew of Lynn. During the evening Mr. and Mrs. Horner were presented with an easy chair. An excellent supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. Horner desire to tender their heart-felt thanks for the welcome visit of their neighbors and friends on the evening of Jan. 18th, and for the bountiful supper provided by them and also for the two elegant and costly chairs which they left behind them.

The Marblehead Messenger says of Mr. Power the shoeman: the members of the Cucumber Club were tendered a complimentary supper by Lewis R. Power at his residence on Washington street on Thursday evening. The club was represented by some fifteen members. A first-class oyster supper with pastry and fruits of all kinds was served. William P. Goss, of Portland, Me. was present and amused the company with some characteristic songs. Remarks were made by Messrs. Power, Carkin, Blaney, Lecraw, Martin, Shepard, Stevens and Bartlett. At about midnight the party broke up with cheers for Power and the Club. The Club proposes to have its next re-union in Portland, Me.

The meeting of the Murray Association on Monday evening at the Universalist Vestry was well attended and an excellent programme was offered by the musical committee, consisting of piano solos and duets, singing and a grand wind-up by the Mattheo Club. This is an organization of seven young ladies and gentlemen belonging to the Murray. They played upon different instruments, including banjo, piano, harmonica, bones, triangle and xylophone, producing a very unique performance, which took immensely and displayed much musical taste. At a reception to be given by the Murray to the Society it is expected they will repeat it. Mr. Charles S. Goldthwait is the very efficient President who assisted by able committees is running the Murray in first class manner.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC CALL.

Several days ago, the prohibitionists of Little Rock, recognizing the necessity of securing the services of an able orator, to "keep the pot boiling," as they termed it, engaged Col. Bulkin, an able lawyer, who lives in a neighboring town. The Colonel has long been known as one of the most eloquent speakers in the State, which together with his high moral character and life-long sobriety, render his speeches deeply impressive.

It was arranged to hold a spirited meeting on the night of the Colonel's arrival, and the opera house was tastily decorated. A large number of ladies and gentlemen met the Colonel at the depot and escorted him to the committee rooms. Shortly before the time for the address arrived, the president of the anti-liquor association said:

"Colonel, I must go out and make a few more preparations. You can remain here until the committee calls for you." The Colonel assented, of course, and taking up a prohibition paper he began reading a story entitled, "One Foot in the Grave, or a Bead of Whisky on a Ragged Moustache." Presently a man, with a purple face, entered and asked:

"Where's the committee?"

"Gone out to make arrangements. Have a seat."

"No, I haven't got time. I called to tell the gentlemen that I have kept my promise. Several days ago I vowed that if ever I bought another bottle of whisky I would come here and surrender it. Here's a quart that I bought just now, but conquering myself with a final effort, I have brought it here," and he placed a large bottle on the table. "Just to think," continued the reformed man, "that I spent my last cent for this vile stuff. Wish you'd tell the committee that I've kept my promise."

"All right," replied the Colonel. "I shall take pleasure to-night in referring to your victory. I do not deserve any credit for not drinking as I have no appetite for the horrible stuff, having never tasted it."

The man withdrew and the Colonel sat regarding the bottle. "I am to fight you," he mused. "You, the terror of women and the downfall of men. I will drive you from the country. I will reclaim the lost; I will bring reconciliation and balm where quarrel and misery have been rife." He took up the paper and again began to read the story. Somehow he couldn't keep his eyes off the bottle. "The horrible stuff," and he shivered. "Looks innocent, too. Just like rain water. How the weak and foolish are deceived by appearances. Believe I'll throw it away. I can explain to the committee. I don't want the stuff to remain in the same room with me." He took up the bottle and shook it; the cork popped out. "Ah, you viper, I am enlisted against you. Your master handles you now. Look me in the eye, John Barleycorn," and he squinted at the neck of the bottle. "I could take you between my very teeth and defy you." He placed his lips over the neck of the bottle. An unaccountable movement of the arm, a nervous action which we all experience at times, when asleep and when awake, the Colonel tipped up the bottle and received a mouthful of the enemy. He swallowed it with a gasp, and putting the bottle down crossed the room and stared at it in amazement. Pretty soon he walked slowly to the desk, took up the bottle and tilted it again. He walked around and then took a louder "snort." Pretty soon he took a lingering "pull," and finally he sat on the floor with his back to the wall, with the bottle between his knees. His "snorts" and "pulls" became more frequent. As the committe, arrayed in ribbons and rosettes, ascended the stairway, they were surprised to hear dancing, accompanied by a discordant song. Opening the door, a disgraceful sight met their view, The Colonel, with his coat off and his pantaloons tucked up, was dancing around the bottle."

"Come in," he cried, "glad t'zee yer. Got ole enemy down fine. Have suthin."

The gentlemen of the committee were disgusted. They locked the room, went to the opera house and dismissed the audience. When they returned they found the Colonel trying to stand on his head. An ardent man should never play with an enemy.—Askansaw Traveler.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN AMERICA.

It is now just about two hundred years since the first Presbyterian church was organized in this country. Between 1670 and 1680 Scottish Presbyterians settled on the eastern branch of Elizabeth river, near Norfolk, in Virginia, and had a minister from Ireland. His name was Francis McKemie. He was licensed in the year 1681, and soon after ordained as an evangelist. He went first to Barbadoes, one of the West India islands, but did not remain there long. In 1684 he organized the Presbyterian church at Snow Hill, Maryland. At about the same time he extended his labors southwardly on the "eastern shore" of Virginia, and bought land in Accomac county. He had preaching services regularly at Pocomoke, and also at Onancock. It would thus appear that the first regular Presbyterian organization known was about the year 1684. The two hundredth anniversary would fall in the year 1884.

We know, and what is better, we feel inwardly, that religion is the basis of civil society, and the source of all good and of all comfort.

It has been well said he who will observe providences will always have providences to observe.

A STARTLING STATEMENT!

Corroborated by the Chief of Police.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1881.

DR. CHARLES CRAIG:—Dear Sir: Suffering as I have been for a long time with a fearful cold, that finally settled into what is termed quick consumption, and so pronounced by the attending physician, I heard of your Consumption Cure, and while having little faith in anything benefitting me, procured some of it, used it, and to day am, to the wonder of myself and friends, a well man.—I write this, as I feel in duty bound to do, for the benefit of suffering humanity, and can but hope that the thousands who are now suffering with that supposed incurable disease Consumption will try your Consumption Remedy. They will receive speedy relief and a permanent cure. You can send any one to me who cares to be advised as to the manner in which your medicines cured me.

P. H. SULLIVAN, Captain Police.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 14, 1882.

We, the undersigned, are personally acquainted with Captain P. H. Sullivan. We knew of his debilitated condition at one time, are knowing to the fact that he is now daily on duty, and are satisfied he would not make any statement that was not strictly true.

Miscellaneous.

A CURIOUS SNUFF-BOX.

Shortly after the breaking out of the French Revolution its advocates denounced our Premier as "an enemy to the human race;" that man "so easy to live with," who sang the song about himself called "Billy Pitt, the Tory." His secretary one day told him that a foreigner, who spoke English tolerably well, had twice or thrice asked to see him, but, not looking like a proper applicant, had been sent away, the great man's time being too important for him to admit every stranger who on frivolous pretexts might seek to gratify an idle curiosity. This person, however, had said that he would return in an hour. The secretary, therefore, thought it his duty to inform Mr. Pitt of such intention and ask his further orders in the affair.

"Have the goodness," said the Minister, "to open the top left drawer in the cabinet and bring me its contents."

There were a pair of pistols and a morocco case; opening the latter he produced a snuff-box in which was set a portrait.

"Is that like our visitor?" asked Pitt.

"It is the man, sir," answered the secretary.

"Ha, I have expected him for some days. He is sent over to assassinate me; so, when he calls again, let him be shown up."

"Sir!" exclaimed the attached retainer; "will you expose to danger your life on which so much depends?"

"There will be no danger, I thank you; but you may be within call, if you please."

Accordingly the Frenchman, on his return, was ushered into the room where William Pitt sat alone—a loaded pistol in one hand and the miniature in the other.

"Monsieur Mehee de la Touche," said Pitt, calmly, "you see I am in every way prepared for you, thanks to an agent employed by this government. Attempt my life, and your own instantly pays the forfeit. In any case I shall have you secured and given over to the law."

The intended assassin stood paralyzed and dumb at this cool reception.

"But," continued Pitt, "there is another alternative; personal safety and high rewards are in your power. Sell your services to Great Britain; make your market of whatever secret information you can procure, that may guard us against the machinations of your country; be, in fact, one of those necessary evils which policy forces us to use in desperate cases; do what no honorable man could do to save yourself from death; your conscience is stained by purposed murder. Comply, perforce, with these conditions, and you shall be as liberally paid as you must, by all parties, be justly despised.

The secretary used to repeat his illustrious master's words, which were, as nearly as possible, to the above effect.

The clever miscreant joyfully accepted these terms and for many years earned the bribes of a spy.

No doubt a snuff-box was the safest medium for the warning portrait, as fancy heads frequently adorned such a thing; while had the miniature been set as a locket whoever saw must have been sure that it depicted some real individual.—London Society.

CAPTAIN BASSETT'S GREAT SECRET.

A Washington correspondent writes: Daniel Webster resigned his seat in the United States Senate on July 20, 1850. His desk is still in the Senate Chamber, but which one, where it sits, and who is the lucky Senator that has it, are secrets to all the world except Captain Bassett, whom Mr. Webster brought here when a mere boy and put him in position as a page eighteen years before he resigned. Captain Bassett has held a position in the Senate from that day until the present, being Acting Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms now. But to the story of the desk. As above stated, the possessor of it or its number is as profound a secret to the Senator who sits in it as it is to an Egyptian mummy. Captain Bassett's reason for keeping all knowledge of the numbers of Mr. Webster's, Mr. Clay's and Mr. Calhoun's seats a secret is that, knowing and understanding the desire of the average American citizen, both male and female, for relics, he fears to give the secret away, lest the desk would be chipped away by piecemeal by the curious who throng the Capitol every day. There has been no change in these desks from the day they were brought into the Capitol until now, other than the annual coat of varnish. Captain Bassett has a memorandum record of their numbers and places, and will, when he comes to shuffle off this mortal coil, furnish to the proper person all the information relative to those desks, in order that their history may be carefully preserved. There are three other desks in the Senate chamber which curiosity hunters would like to be able to see and know that they are the right ones. These are the desks of Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi; Stephen A. Douglass, of Illinois, and Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts. Mr. Davis' desk occupied the same position in the chamber that Mr. Beck's does now, but it is not known to any one except Captain Bassett whether or not it is the same one. Mr. Douglas was in the same place as that occupied by Mr. Pendleton, and Mr. Sumner was in the place now occupied by Mr. Dawes. In 1862, when the New York zouaves were in the city, about twenty of them went into the Senate chamber to destroy the chair and desk that had been occupied by Mr. Davis. Captain Bassett put in his appearance and asked them what they were about. They quickly told him that they were going to destroy the seat and desk because they were once used by Jeff. Davis. Captain Bassett suggested to them that their mission to Washington was to protect public property and not to destroy it.

From the Pittsfield, (Mass.,) Eagle.

Stone in the Bladder is at once a most annoying and very dangerous ailment; but many most remarkable cures have of late been wrought by "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy"—the invention of Dr. Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y. Another striking case is now added to the list. Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., states in a letter to Dr. Kennedy that he had been troubled with bladder complaint for 14 years, and had consulted at different times seven physicians; but nothing beyond temporary allayment of the pain had been worked for him. Towards the end of last January Mr. Lawler called on Dr. Kennedy. Sounding him, the doctor "struck stone." He decided that Mr. Lawler should first try the "Favorite Remedy," so as, if possible, to avoid an operation. And here is the remarkable result: "Dear Doctor Kennedy—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. If you would like to see the stones I will send them to you." This letter bears date "Dalton, Mass., Feb. 6," and is signed "Peter Lawler." The stones, which are so large as to warrant for "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" the claim that it is the most successful specific for Stone yet discovered, are now in Dr. Kennedy's possession. Incidentally Mr. Lawler also states that the "Favorite Remedy" at the same time cured him of a stubborn case of rheumatism; and it is a fact that in all affections arising out of disorders of the liver or urinary organs it is a searching remedy and works marvelous benefits. It is in itself almost a medicine chest. Order it of your druggist. Price $1 a bottle. jan 17

ALMOST AS BAD.

What the Perplexed Physicians do in Cases of Emergency.

"I'll tell you the honest truth," answered the doctor. "Bright's Disease bothers the medical men almost as badly as cancer does. Having passed a certain stage, both point straight to eternity. It may be unprofessional to let out the secret, but whenever a patient comes to me with Bright's Disease, or any kidney trouble acting like it, I tell him to put on BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER without delay."

The doctor spoke by the card. The Capcine goes right to the spot. If you can be helped, the Capcine will do it. Look out for frauds. Is the word CAPCINE cut in the middle of the plaster? If so, you are all right. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York. Highest awards. jan 17

A WAR INCIDENT.

Much comment has been made on the bravery of an English marine who caught up a shell from the deck of a bombarding vessel at Alexandria and dipped the fuse into a pail of water, thereby preventing its explosion and its accompanying disasters, for which he is to receive special decorations from the hands of the Queen. Since which there has been many comparative cases of similar bravery mentioned among our own Yankee soldiers during the late war. There are few persons whose fortune it has been to be under fire but have observed much of the same kind of coolness; indeed, it was so common that only the cases coming under the notice of newspaper writers or officers high in command were ever noticed in print or official reports.

My thought in writing this was to tell a story of a different character, but one in which the courage of a young lad was not less marked under sadder surroundings.

On the second day of Antietam I was ordered by Dr. Samuel Rollins, P. R. V. R., to find a place where there was water and shelter sufficient to accommodate a field hospital. A place having all the requisites, close to our line of battle, was found upon the farm of Mr. John Showman, and his barns, sheds, house and yards were quickly filled with rows of wounded men.

Though out of range of the enemy's guns, it was a place to try the courage of those in attendance. Every move of the surgeons was watched by scores of men, and upon arising from a patient from as many lips would come the much-used salute, "For God's sake, doctor, attend to me now."

One little fellow, about seventeen years old, was particularly urgent in his calls. Upon going to him I found that he had been struck in the right side of the abdomen by a grapeshot, making two wounds—one of entrance and another of exit—through both of which a large knuckle of bowels was protruding. The case looked so hopeless that I passed him by with a promise that I would call again, and went to work on cases where there was more promise of doing some good. But every time I arose from a patient his pleading eyes would meet me, and his pathetic appeal could no longer be resisted; so hunting up Dr. Rollins and enlisting his ready sympathy and able hand, we placed him under the influence of chloroform, and made a faithful attempt to replace the protruding and inflamed bowel, but found the injury so great that the case was beyond the help of the surgeon. We left him to the care of a comrade. Upon his return to consciousness he asked the result. His friend declined to give him the information, but summoned me. I sat down upon the ground beside him and told him of the sad results of our efforts, and assured him that the end was surely and speedily coming.

"Then," said he, "there is no hope. I must die." Upon being assured that such was the case, he asked for his knapsack, took from it some keepsakes, and asked that they be sent to No. 110 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, the home of his mother. He requested that I would write his mother, telling her of his death, and where his body might be found; that I would say to his mother and sister that he had died with a heart tender with their precious memories, and that he died without fear or regret, giving his life for his country, which they had taught him to love so well. His name was Bryant—Wm. H., I think. I have forgotten the company and regiment. After making his arrangements, he lay with the greatest patience and cheerfulness awaiting the final discharge, which came in a few hours. Not a murmur or complaint, but resignation until the last. This is one of the tenderest of many sad recollections of army days, and in my opinion showed a courage of a higher character than the wetting of a fuse or the hasty putting of a shell out of the way of doing personal damage. —Dr. George I. Rice, in Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Twenty-seven years ago, a farmer, who lived near Keezletown, Va., built a dairy and placed in it two yellow suckers as pets. The farmer has been dead for a number of years, but his widow still lives, and during all these years she has carefully fed and cared for her pet fish. One of them died several years ago, and the other gave up the ghost only a few days ago, after having lived in the dairy twenty-seven years. The fish was about eighteen inches long, and had become so tame that it was not the least frightened by the approach of its mistress with its feed.

At Council Bluffs, Iowa, a gentleman who owns a fine stallion also has a large bulldog. The horse and dog have never seemed to be good friends, and the other day the dog got into the stall occupied by the horse, and a furious fight ensued between the two. The dog sprang at the horse with savage determination, but was shaken off by the horse, who kicked the dog severely. The dog resumed the attack, and the two fought for an hour so furiously that no one dared interfere, and it was only after the persistent dog had been badly used up that he desisted and limped out of the stable. The horse was not seriously injured, but it is thought the dog will die.

It is amusing to detect character in the vocabulary of each person. The adjectives habitually used, like the inscriptions on a thermometer, indicate the temperament.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.
J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.
P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

The NEW YORK, 1883. Sun.

More people have read THE SUN during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read and like THE SUN for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs THE SUN makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whale as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The SUN has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the SUN is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

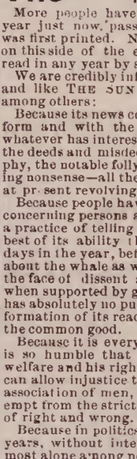
Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robesonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the SUN stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the SUN is the best religious newspaper ever published, because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor.—A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the SUN discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the SUN, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before.—If you do not already know the SUN, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of commonsense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government, a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

Terms to Mail Subscribers.

The several editions of THE SUN are sent by mail, postpaid, as follows:



DAILY—55 cents a month. $6.50 a year; with Sunday edition, $7.70.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—$1 year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues; an Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, market reports, and literary, scientific and domestic intelligence make THE WEEKLY SUN the newspaper for the farmer's household. To clubs of ten with $10, an extra copy free. Address

COMPOUND PEPSIN TONIC

Compound essence of pepsin. A remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion as shown in loss of appetite, nausea, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, water-brash, and a sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach. Dose, one tablespoonful (for adults) before meals.

Dyspepsia or indigestion is very prevalent in this country owing to habits of living—especially of eating and drinking. There is a disagreeable sensation in the stomach, although there may be no pain. When there is pain it is located in the breast, giving rise to fears of lung disease. There is a slight nausea; the mouth is clammy, or has a sour, bitter taste; the complexion is sallow, the bowels are costive, and there may be heartburn, water-brash, flatulence, palpitation of the heart (causing fear of heart disease), headache or double sight. The disease may be caused by either too much or too little exercise, too severe application of the mind, excessive emotion, intemperance in alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea or coffee, too warm and too rich food, ice water, excessive use of medicine, etc. For sale by

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings, Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it

J. E. Bruorton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March 1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

Reminiscences.

It was somewhat later in the years which I mentioned in my last, that a circumstance occurred which I will endeavor to give. There was a dwelling next to the Nye House on the west, and occupied by I. W. Carey, the front room of which he used as a paint shop. He had two men who worked for him constantly, both of whom would often indulge in a little innocent sport, much of which our old friend, Squires Shove, would engineer.

There was a small building, one story high, just west of the Carey house and in close proximity to it, owned by Shove, the front of which was occupied by a gentleman by the name of Bennett, as a harness shop; while the rear was used as a ware house by Shove himself, where he collected a variety of articles every fall, such as beef, mutton, poultry, potatoes and nuts, and he had a box of old fashioned picked toe shoes. Many of those articles he would sell and take the purchaser's note running with interest. He would often drop into the paint shop and chat with the workmen, one of whom gained his entire confidence and on whom he lavished his especial regard. As Thanksgiving day approached he would lay in a large amount of choice poultry suited to the wants of every lover of the time; a large quantity of which he would sell as I have before mentioned.

There was a building near Poole's brook where the boys would congregate on the evening before Thanksgiving and raffle for turkeys. It might be called a trade; the results were the same, the standard of morals was just as high as betting on options or the price of grain. It had one superiority, the article was present, and the gaming was on real articles, not imaginary commodities, and it only differed in one point, that it was not legalized by the legislator. On the day preceding Thanksgiving, Friend Shove, as was his wont, stepped into the paint shop and was telling the boys what a beautiful lot of poultry he had bought. The youngest of the men requested a present of a turkey. Said friend Shove, "if thee can get one out of my ware house and I not know it, thee shall be welcome to the finest that I have, and Bennett may have one to." As the weather was warm on that day, and the evening was moon lit although somewhat cloudy, the words uttered in the paint shop were probably forgotten. The young man called on Bennett and related what had been said to him, and the proposal was made to get in to the window between the buildings which neighbor Shove had opened for air, and hand out two of the fowls. Bennett was to stop outside to take them, and signal by a whistle if friend Shove was coming; while the young man was to select according to promise of friend Shove. But Bennett, imagining that he heard something, ran away. The young man finding his companion gone, got out at the window with his turkey and went down the back way by the marsh, and came on Main street near the McIntire house. As he came up to the residence of friend Shove, he found him on his door step, as usual, and enquiring who came there, turning around in his chair he recognized him and said: "Is it thee? what have thee got? Oh! thee has been to the raffle; did thee get a good one? let's see. It is not so good as mine, why did thee not have one of me? Thee can't get a good one down there." The young man then reminded him of his promise and related over the circumstance of the proposition with Bennett and then added that his companion cleared the place. Friend Shove then said, "Ha, ha, ha, what a timid fellow Bennett is; he is always scared to death at nothing," little thinking the turkey came from his repository. J. G. PHELPS.

Water Bubbles.

Although knowledge is power, yet much of the knowledge that attracts the human mind, leaves only a transitory gleam behind. Though capital owes its existence to labor, yet the latter often goes a begging, while the former as often adopts the go-as-you please doctrine of the day. Though the inventive genius of the imperturbable Yankee is proverbial throughout the world, yet necessity is not the only prompter to invention. Competition, or the desire to outstrip our neighbor on the road to wealth, is slowly but surely undermining the very foundation of our trades and professions, and nowhere is this more observable than in the staple manufactures of the town we live in. A photographic view of the shoe and leather trade throughout the country gives one to understand that this business holds in its embrace a combination of all the disaffected spirits from all other trades or professions. Though knowledge is power, yet probably not more than twenty per cent. of those now engaged in the shoe and leather trade have a full, thorough, practical knowledge of the nature of the manufactured goods of this description, thrown upon the market.

Forty years practical observation should convince one that the excessive use of machinery and the breaking up of all trades or professions into so many divisions and sub-divisions, has a tendency to discourage and undervalue skilled labor. The young men of the present day have no desire to bind themselves as apprentices to any particular trade or profession; thus the ranks of the mechanic are filled with a class whose minds seem well stored with a "thimble-full knowledge" of everything but the trade they represent; while the fondly cherished theoretic opinions so frequently expressed by the preacher, render both the lecture-room and house of worship less attractive than in the days of "Auld Lang-Syne." Educate your daughters to become happy wives and mothers, Saith the Sage. No doubt the influence of lovely woman shows itself in all its purity and beauty within the charms of the domestic circle, yet the world is still in its infancy, and here in the nineteenth century there are thousands of females so constituted, as to render it impossible for them to enter into the full enjoyment of the connubial state. Then what should prevent them from forcing themselves into all those trades and professions for which they find their education renders them competent? Is labor more degrading to the female than male? In all virtue and honesty the world owes them a living, and a living they must have, and thus they should not be restrained in the struggle for independence. By this we do not mean that they should over-turn the Government, or work a revolution in the mechanic arts; certainly it would be quixotic in the extreme to see a lady president of this good old Republic; and there are many trades in which the present style of dress would be not only objectionable but unbecoming, and we fear that our effort to counteract in the female mind all desire to worship at the shrine of the votaries of fashion would cause many water bubbles, all in the eye.

Though knowledge is power, yet very few among the many visitors at the Peabody Library ever call to mind that the foundation of the Institute rests upon the site of the old hide-mill; a name given to a small unpretending brick building long used as a news room, by a generation gone by, and in their nightly discussions regarding the market valuation of wool, hides, tallow, hard soap, and other manufactures, probably the question of a scarcity of water was not duly considered, the public mind at that time not being prepared for the rapid advance in rank and importance which has characterized the town during the last twenty-five years. VICTOR.

At this season of the year, no line of boats to New York is more popular than the Stonington. It has long been a matter of pride with this company that they always make connections, and that they always arrive on time. Theirs is an inside line; and except in case of very severe storms, no more anxiety need be experienced than in the summer. We regard a boat line, even in the cold weather, as more comfortable than the cars; the boats are well warmed by steam, and nothing is spared by the managers of this line to make the trip one of safety as well as comfort. The officers are courteous and agreeable; and the state rooms are certainly more healthful than the poorly ventilated sleepers to New York.

AN INCIDENT IN VIRGINIA. Our old friend, Mr. Wm. Claughton, of Heathsville, sheriff of Northumberland Co., Va., says: "We have many good medicines in our parts, but nothing which equals St. Jacobs Oil, the Great German Remedy. My family keep the Oil in the house at all times and use it for almost everything that a medicine can be used for. They claim that it is unequaled for rheumatism and all bodily pains.— Tappahannock, (Va.,) Tide Water Index.

Letters advertised Jan. 24, 1883: Mr. Barnstead, E. Baker, Narcisse Ducharme, John Dean, Henry Fellows, Margaret Fennely, Calix Gravel, Alonzo Holman, Jack Harris, John Leary, Edward Linnehan, Elmer Littlefield, G. T. Larsien, Miss Litchman, Michael McCarty, Mary E. Mahoney, (2 letters) Wm. A. McKenna, John McIntyre, J. N. Stone, Mrs. Dowdell Steele, Fannie Simonds, O. Ward.

GEORGE RANDALL, P. M.

To Benjamin F. Butler: When you stopped taking the governor's copy of the Boston Post, did you also stop keeping your back-pay? No? Then, permit us to inquire, thou that strainest at a gnat, if swallowing a camel is not provocative of the most frightful sort of dyspepsia?—New York Tribune.

The Boston Herald says Messrs. Abbey & Schoeffel have bought the Park theatre and International hotel property, 615 to 619 Washington street, Boston. The amount paid is understood to be in the neighborhood or $300,000. It is expected that important alterations and improvements will be made.

"Old Abe" once replied to a question early in the war as to how the Union reverses affected him, by saying: "I feel very much like a great stalwart Illinois neighbor of mine who was out logging in his bare feet. A log rolled over and crushed one of his big toes before he could escape. All drawn up with pain, he replied to a question of how he was, with, "Well, I'm too big to cry, but it hurts too damn bad to laugh."

We see an article going the rounds headed, "How Journalism Pays." Yes, we all know how journalism pays. My, how rich we are, and how soft a pile of old exchanges are to sleep on. Journalism pays—five cents on the dollar.—Louisville Mascotte.

Hose 4 have a social party this evening at their house on Pierpont street.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—Business before "his honor" has been very quiet during the week, only three cases coming up for trial. Jan. 20. Michael Ryan, who has begun the new year by "continuing the old programme on a new leaf" was the first to receive a fine of $6.55 for drunkenness. Not having the money with him he was taken to Salem jail.

Jan. 24. Joseph Cochrane employed at Geo. Clerk's, after drinking pretty freely thought he knew more about the business than the proprietor, and made a general nuisance of himself. He was arrested and his honor thought the county would be satisfied with one dollar and costs or $5.85.

James Foster of Danvers was another who indulged pretty freely yesterday, knowing it to be cold outside and hoping to warm up inside. He went through Central street requiring the whole of the street to manage his feet in. The many acquaintances that he made on the way (for he was very talkative) became anxious about him and sent word to the police for fear he would sleep out of doors. After a search of an hour or more the officers found him near Pike & Whipple's and this morning the court thought $5.85 would make it right and no charge for lodgings.

A SALT LAKE ROMANCE.—Years ago, while Brigham Young, Jr., was visiting his second wife's relations, at Philadelphia, he fell in love with one of them named Libbie ——, and Libbie became infatuated with him, but refused to marry him unless he discarded all his other spouses. Strange to say, Brigham, Jr., made a settlement on each of them, and he and Libbie were married. They lived happily until the death of old Brigham, who induced his son to look for the succession to the presidency, and to strengthen his influence with the church, to take two new wives. On this Libbie left him, and ever since both of them have pined with broken hearts. She still maintains intimate relations with his former wives, and frequently visits them, and when she goes to Salt Lake, Brigham hovers around her residence to get a glimpse of her, but she will not see him. And yet everybody says she loves him and he still loves her, though ambition proved the stronger passion.—Lippincott's Magazine.

WILMOT'S

NEW YEAR'S GREETING OF 1883.

BROKEN LOTS.

At this time of the year, after the regular season's trade is over we have a large number of Overcoats, Suits and Pantaloons left, which are in broken lots and which we shall sell in many cases at less than the actual cost of the fabric from which they are manufactured. The reason of our selling these goods at such ridiculously low prices is because the sizes are not complete and consequently ought not to be carried over to next season.

In order to close these goods we have marked them at prices that will sell them, to the last garment.

REMEMBER ! { We may not be able to fit all, but those of you who can get fitted will get wonderful bargains. If you don't wish them for this winter, buy them for next. It will pay you.

We have not space to enumerate the articles, styles or prices, but ask you to come and see for yourself, and we are sure you will be repaid for your time and trouble.

ALL { of our departments are included in this sale; if you are in need of anything that we have in any of our departments, be sure and give us a call.

N. B. Would call your special attention to a bargain lot of Winter driving vests, made from heavy winter overcoatings which we shall offer, to close, at $1.50, 2.00, 2.50 and $3.00.

OUR DEPARTMENTS.

Men's ready-made, Hats and Caps.

Boys' ready-made, Furnishing Goods,

and Merchant Tailoring.

Everything marked in plain figures. STRICTLY ONE PRICE.

Dramatic and Musical.

Mr. John McCullough will conclude with the performances of the current week his highly successful engagement at the Boston Theatre—an engagement which has strengthened his great popularity and will be remembered with much satisfaction. This evening the members of the Massachusetts Press Association, who banquet at the Quincy House, will visit this theatre by the kind invitation of Messrs. Tompkins & Hill. To-morrow evening he plays Julius Caesar, Friday, Brutus, by special request, on Saturday Matinee "The Lady of Lyons" and in the evening Richard III. Next week Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels will play a weeks engagement.

The new play of Courage is running very smoothly at the Park, and as this is the last week, we urge our readers to visit it. No such performance has been given at this theatre during the season. Next week we are to have Miss Margaret Mather, supported by young Salvini. This actress has been greeted with remarkable audiences. The Rochester Democrat says: "In the potion scene the intensity of passion is made terribly real. The terror of the half-crazed girl, as one horrible vision after another is conjured up by excited imagination, is absolutely startling, and then, if not before, all traces of the personality of the actress are lost and it is the ideal Juliet that is seen—the fear-stricken, tormented girl, driven to the desperate expedient."

The famous Hanlon brothers come this week to the Globe Theatre, and their successful and unique entertainment, "Le Voyage en Suisse," will be presented for a brief season. Everybody knows what agile fellows these Hanlons are, and how cleverly they carry out the amusing piece which has brought them fame on both sides of the water. "Le Voyage en Suisse" will be given by a company of actors stronger than any that has previously been seen in the play, and the mechanical effects will be most carefully presented.

One is fairly dazzled with the beauty of the scene on entering the new and elegant little theatre which has been christened the Bijou. The entrance at the stairway is at once a surprise, and at the landing one finds a beautiful room, with agreeable attendants, where a short rest can be obtained before entering the auditorium proper. The walls are richly tinted, and we pass through an archery of elegant draperies instead of a doorway. Inside the theatre is lighted with incandescent electric light, and everything is a feast to the eye. The opera of Iolanthe is still drawing full houses, and is likely to for months to come.

Denman Thompson is to say "By Gosh" on the stage of the Park Theatre this time. His engagement follows that of Margaret Mather.

A large house was at Callendar's Minstrel entertainment last Friday evening. They made a fine display at the parade in the afternoon, and the public were prepared to see a fine entertainment, in which they were not disappointed. The singing was greatly enjoyed and the drill of the dancing Zouaves was worth the entire price of admission.

Moulton & Johnson have secured the Equine Paradox for a week in Salem, after their engagement at the Windsor Theatre in Boston.

Friday evening "My Partner" will be presented in Salem Mr. Louis Aldrich has become so identified with the play that it would seem strange to see him in any other. The drama is one of the best of the many of California life, and Mr. Parsloe is the best representative of Chinese character in this country. The support will be good and there will be, of course, a crowded house.

To-morrow night the members of the Unity Club will bring out a comedy and farce at their chapel. It is for the benefit of the Organ fund, and as the Unitarian people are all interested, there will be an audience only limited by the capacity of the chapel. Tickets are only 25 cts., and we advise our readers to be on hand in good season, if they would get in.

Friday evening, H. Brooks Hooper will bring Little Corinne and her company to the Peabody Institute. The advance sale of tickets at Hewitt's already augurs a full house. Those who have seen little Corinne know of her wonderful dramatic power. We shall be surprised if there are any seats to be had at the door.

Among the announcements for this month in Salem are Hyde & Behman's Specialty Combination Feb. 14th, under the management of N. W. Andrews & Co.; the Boston Theatre Co., including William Redmund, in the White Slave, Feb. 16, John McCullough, Feb. 12th, and Carrie Swain in her new play Feb. 9, under Moulton & Johnson.

The American Hibernian Society of this town, will present at Peabody Institute to-morrow, Thursday evening, a first class variety entertainment. The stars are well known in this vicinity and will probably draw a full house. This entertainment is given to replenish the treasury of the Society, which has been drawn upon largely of late by the sickness of members and other causes. A liberal patronage should be extended.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society of this town have arranged for an entertainment at Upton's Hall, Thursday evening, Feb. 8th. Prof. Fillebrown will perform feats of legerdemain, following which ice cream, cake and coffee will be for sale. The object of this society is well known, and is worthy of patronage.

It will be seen by advertisement that Post 34, G. A. R., of Salem are to produce a military drama, in Mechanic Hall, Feb. 5, 6, 7 and 8, entitled "The German Volunteer." All reserved seats will be 50 cents, and are for sale at Ropes'.

THE COUNTY FINANCES. — The County of Essex expended in the year 1882 $488,121.90 and received $449,270.63. The cash balance in the treasury January 1, 1883, was $4,077.26 against $42,928.53 in the treasury, January 1, 1882. The expenditures were the following. On principal of county debt, $33,000; on temporary loan, $130,000; interest, $12,962.87; support of prisoners and insane at Ipswich, $22,700.72; support of prisoners at Lawrence, $22,684.53; support of prisoners at Salem $6,907.48; support of prisoners at Newburyport, $2,227.98; for criminal prosecutions, $35,767.18; jurors, $13,832.41; officers at court, $3,772.49; constables, $393.36; auditors in civil cases, $1,142.32; Medical Examiners and inquests, $1353.81; examining and committing insane, $1660.82; recording, $1244.55; indexing records, $4500; printing and stationery, $2067.41; court houses, $4435.94; repairs and furniture for county buildings, $5,708.31; Essex County Law Library, $2000; highways, $1886.70; Groveland bridge, $47,514.12; Deer Island bridge, $99,031.61; Rocks bridge $154; County Commissioners' salaries, $3,276.38; assistants to Clerk of Courts, $4157.75; Sheriff's salary, $1800; County Treasurer's salary for 13 months, $1950; Justices District and Police Courts, $9089.17; clerks of do., $5118.94; special justices, $601; Assistant District-Attorney's salary, $816.66; rent First District court-room, $1000; fines and costs refunded, $65; cities and towns for unexpended dog licenses in 1881, $11,039.59; damage to sheep and domestic animals, $822.80; killing dogs' $382.

The receipts have been from taxes in 1882, $153,700; temporary loan, $240,000; interest, $975.81; board of insane at Ipswich, $8118.39; clothing of insane at Ipswich, $1256.75; board of prisoners at Ipswich, 51.29; labor of prisoners at Ipswich, $1875.27; farm products at Ipswich, $226.12; board of prisoners at Lawrence, $176.81; labor of prisoners at Lawrence, $4,152.05; articles sold at Lawrence house of correction, $123.08; articles sold at Salem jail, $39.05; fines and costs from police courts, etc., $15,161.56; police court fees, $5543.58; unclaimed witness fees, police courts, $1150.65; Clerk of Courts fees, $2800.17; peddlers' licenses, $388; dog licenses, $13,531.55.

The net debt of the county is $268,956.41 against $147,516.02 on January 1 1882. The out-standing notes amount to $141,000, and the out-standing temporary loan is $110,000. On January 1, 1883, the County Treasurer hired $60,000. The large increase is due to the construction of the expensive bridges over the Merrimac. It is expected that about $36,000 will be returned on the account of the Groveland bridge.

About sixty couple were present at the private assembly at Temperance Hall last evening and one of the best of social times was enjoyed. Music was furnished by a band under the leadership of Mr. Benj. F. Upton. The party broke up at twelve o'clock. The next will be held Thursday evening Feb. 15, 1883.

The friends of Deacon and Mrs. Richard Smith met informally at the residence of Mr. Smith on Franklin street Friday evening, it being the 25th. anniversary of their marriage. An easy chair was given him by his children in addition to several other gifts. The evening was spent in a social manner and in hearty congratulations.

W. F. Sawyer has had a new floor laid in his store, No. 48 Main St., and a new counter put in at the rear instead of the circular one formerly in use. This gives more room in the store which is needed, as Mr. Sawyer has consolidated the two stores in one. On the whole, this will be a great convenience to his patrons, although it will crowd his stock somewhat behind the counters.

Last Monday evening about ten o'clock a sleigh considerably damaged and a horse about played out, and a man completely drunk was stopped by a man named Ware on Central street and the party over hauled. It was found he belonged in Middleton and after taking advice of the parties who gathered around he was allowed to proceed and it is supposed his faithful animal took his master home.

Two little girls had a narrow escape the other day. While sliding on a "clipper" sled down the lane from St. John's church they collided with a heavy express wagon on Lowell street. But for the presence of mind of the driver, who immediately stopped his horse when he saw their danger, serious results might have occurred. As it was the girls were considerably scattered and awfully frightened.

The men employed as tanners and curriers in the factories of this town have had several meetings with an object for organizing for mutual protection. By this we don't mean strikes but care for the relief of its members in case of accident, sickness or death. When a person is sick he is to receive a benefit of $5 a week or in case of death a sum of money is given his family for funeral expenses. A meeting was held last evening.

To show in what a short time Mechanic Hall could be cleared in case of fire, the following is of interest. There was a full house last Friday evening at the entertainment given by Callendar's Minstrels. Mr. Arthur G. Thomas, brother of the noted orchestra leader Mr. Theodore Thomas, and who is advance representative of "My Partner," timed the audience as they left the hall. In just three minutes the gallery and balconies were cleared and in four minutes and thirty-one seconds the whole audience had left the hall.

Life's Record.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMSON.

'Tis well sometimes to backward look,
Along the pages of life's book,
O'er every deed of right or wrong,
O'er every line we've written there
In days of sorrow or of song,
In hours of joy or dull despair.

And if we rightly read them through,
We're better for the interview;
Some pleasing thoughts will find a place
Within our hearts, o'er good attained,
As here and there a line we trace,
Where victory over self we've gained.

And if we further rightly read,
Though thought be pained, o'er some mis deed,
Or cruel wrong and bitter woe
We fain would never greet again.
It makes us stronger, wiser grow,
Better to bear each coming pain.

But while we read, in changeful mood,
The lives of mingled ill and good,
Somehow we bid the past adieu
And close the pages written o'er,
And turn our thoughts into the new,
And question what will be their lore.

What shall we write upon each leaf?
Perchance some lines of bitter grief,
And falling tears the leaves will stain,
And make the book appear less fair;
And deep affliction's piercing pain
Will leave its tracings here and there.

But if some pain the pages mark?
Amid the fair be lines of dark?
If we'll but look with watchful eyes,
Lo! in it all God's hand we'll see;
His good that all about us lies
Through every little "needs-must-be."

Nor would we change or mar the plan,
That God hath written out for man.
For as the rain and sunshine blend
To make the bud in beauty blow,
So good and ill alike portend
To make our virtues fairer grow.

But pray to make while life shall last,
The future better for the past;
Some angel hand to guide our own,
Though joy or grief come o'er our way,
The while we write the record down,
Amid the scenes of every day.

That when some day we close life's book,
Perchance on happier scenes to look,
And the "Recording Angel" reads
The lines therein we've daily traced,
There may be found no evil deeds,
And naught we fain would see erased;
But every leaf be white and fair
When Heaven reveals the record there.

The Host of Night.

Look at the host of night—
These silent stars!
What have they known of blight,
Or heard of wars?

Were they not marshalled there,
These fires sublime,
Gemming the midnight air,
Ere earth knew time?

Shine they for aught but earth,
These silent stars?
And when they sprung to birth
Who broke the bars,

And let their radiance out
To kindle space,
When rang God's morning shout
O'er the glad race?

Are they embedded there,
These silent stars?
Or do they circle air
On brilliant cars?

Range they in frightful mirth
Without a law—
Or stand they above earth
In changeless awe?

Are they all desolate,
These silent stars,—
Hung in their spheres by fate
Which nothing mars?

Or, are they guards of God,
Shining in prayer?
On the same path they've trod
Since light was there!

Selected Story.

Rose Merton's New Year.

"Oh, dear, oh, dear! Was there ever anything so provoking, and to happen on New Year's Eve, too, of all the days in the year! It's enough to try the patience of a saint," exclaimed Mrs. Merton to her niece Rose, sinking into a kitchen-chair and clasping her befloured hands in an agony of despair. "To think the oven should go and crack now, Reuben and your uncle away, and no one to go to the village, and all the mince-pies to bake!"

"Couldn't I go to the village, auntie? If the tinman is in, I could bring him back with me."

"I'm afraid it's a long walk for you, child," dissented Aunt Merton. But from her doubtful tone, Rose knew she might go.

"It will not take me any time to get ready, and I don't mind the cold. I'll walk rapidly enough to keep warm. Is there any errand to do at the village, other than to tell Mr. Johnson about the range, and get him to come over at once?"

"No, I think not, unless you get me a paper of pins and a couple of stout darning-needles. I don't know as I've got anything that'll do to sew the pudding up with to-morrow. And tell Johnson to hurry down here, for all the pies are ready for bakin'. And, Rose, did I put two quarts of milk or three into that pan?"

"You put in three, auntie, but you said you would add a little more when you came to fill the pies."

"La! So I did. I hope you're wrapped up well."

"Oh, yes; I'm well wrapped, really. And don't tire yourself out, auntie, for I'll soon be back to help finish the baking," and Rose let herself out at the kitchen-door, and was soon walking swiftly over the two miles of frosty road that lay between the farm and the nearest village.

It was, indeed, a bitterly cold day; the wind shricked dismally through the almost leafless trees, and the skies were leaden. But Rose Merton did not mind. The buffetings of the wind and her rapid walking sent her young blood tingling healthfully through her veins and flaming in sweet pink patches in her usually pale cheeks, and she felt almost hilarious as she sped swiftly along—racing against time. She did the two miles in just half an hour, and ran triumphantly up the steps of Mr. Johnson's shop. But her elation was somewhat damped, when she found that the gentleman in question and both of his apprentices were out, and could not possibly do a thing to the broken range before Friday; unless, to accommodate—the next day being New Year's—they should work at it late in the evening, or early in the morning.

"Oh, but they must come to-night," said Rose. "Here! I'll write a message and leave it for Mr. Johnson. It would be dreadful if auntie were not able to cook any New Year's dinner. Some breakfast I suppose she could get in the fireplace, but she couldn't roast turkey and things there."

And having written her note, and purchased her pins and needles, Rose turned her face homeward, walking as rapidly as she could, and casting about in her mind how Aunt Susan was to bake the pies. She had just hit upon a plan, and was really laughing at their stupidity in not thinking of it before, when a sound of wheels came swiftly along the road, and then stopped at her side. She glanced up. It was Ralph Dornton. He raised his hat, as she turned her sweet, flushed face to his.

"Are you going home? Will you let me take you, Miss Merton? There is plenty of room, you see, and it's a frightfully cold day for walking."

"I have not found it so," said Rose, growing suddenly calm and cold, "and I prefer walking to driving, thank you."

He looked serious and almost hurt.

"Rose," he said, quite softly, bending nearer her, "may we not, at least, be friends?"

The young face grew harder and prouder.

"No; I don't care about adding to my list of friends. I can not help your being an acquaintance, but I have no desire to look upon you in any other light. Good-morning, Mr. Dornton."

The young man raised his pleading face at that, struck his horse angrily, and dashed away, leaving Rose conscious that the day was very cold, the way very long, the wind piercing, and the leaden sky horribly gloomy and depressing.

"Can't come before this evening, or to-morrow? And what are we to do, and you tired out, poor child," exclaimed Aunt Susan, in distress, as Rose dropped wearily into a chair and related the results of her walk.

"Oh, no! I'm not tired—just a little out of breath with the wind and walking so fast," said Rose briskly and reassuringly, just as her tall cousin Reuben, with a very red nose and red fingers, stepped within the kitchen-door.

"Why, where has Rose been, this cold, disagreeable day," he questioned, rather sharply.

Mrs. Merton called his attention to the broken range, and acquainted him with their domestic tribulations.

"Well, now, that's too bad! But Johnson shall come to-night. I'll bring him myself. And I'm sorry Rose has had such an awful walk."

"I didn't mind it a bit," said Rose, smiling brightly at his solicitude, "and I didn't think it was so dreadfully cold; at least, not till I was coming home. And, auntie, I've thought how we can get the pies baked this afternoon! Out in the old oven in the wood-house."

"I don't know," objected Mrs. Merton; "we haven't used that oven for six or seven years; but I suppose we can use it."

"I should think so; only it must be awfully dirty, and needs a good overhauling, and it'll be cold work carrying all the pies out there. But, if you think you can manage it, I'll clean it out while you and Rose get some dinner. Father'll be up in a few minutes."

His mother thought they could manage, and Rose was sure they could; and so the young man went off to the wood-house, while Rose laid the dinner-table and Aunt Susan carved some cold meat, made tea and got a plentiful supply of cake, pie, and preserves, in lieu of warm vegetables.

They were all at the table before Reuben, who had been twice called, came in from the wood-house, washed his hands and joined his parents and cousin at dinner.

"It was no small job to clean out that oven, I can tell you," he laughed. "Besides all the dust, cobwebs and fallen mortar, those children of Aunt Caroline's, when they were here last summer, had played in it, and about filled it with berries, flowers and mud-pies; and they left some dolls' clothes in it; and I found a letter of yours there, Rose. I don't suppose it is of any account. Some old one," rather questioningly, as he drew the yellow, smeared envelope from his pocket and handed it across the table to her.

"No; not of any account," said Rose, giving one glance at the address, and taking a big swallow of tea to keep her last mouthful of cake from choking her.

"Well, I got it clean at last, and built a roaring fire in it," resumed her cousin, "and I'll rake it down and carry out the first batch of pies for you, after I've seen the cattle fed."

"Thank you. That's nice," nodded Rose. "May I be excused now?"

And away the girl flew to her own room, to tear open the letter Reuben had brought her, and which was addressed in Ralph Dornton's handwriting. She had said, truly, that it was of no account—no account, now—but she did not rest until she had read it.

She had but a moment to spare, but it was long enough to read the brief, fervent lines:

"ROSE:—I am compelled to leave home very suddenly within a few hours, to see my mother. She has had a sudden and dangerous relapse, and my duty to her necessitates my going without even a farewell to you. How I shall endure three or four weeks of absence from you I don't know, for I have learned to love you so dearly that I am only happy when I am with you. I write this instead of saying it, because I cannot wait until my return to know whether I am as dear to you as you, my darling, are to me. I have dared to hope that you love me and will marry me. If my hopes are founded upon truth, will you write me immediately, saying you accept me as

"Your faithful lover,
"RALPH DORNTON.

"P. S.—If you can not say 'Yes' to all I hope and ask, do not write me at all."

And to realize that she had put from her forever the cup of happiness? She bathed her head with icy water, to still its throbbing, and thrust the letter over her heart, it might be to ease its aching, and went down and slipped softly out of the side-door, and ran nearly all way the to Harewood, which was half a mile from the farm. There she handed a note to the servant, and started rapidly home again. The note was addressed to Mr. Dornton; and as that young man was reading in the sitting-room, it soon fell into his hands. He tore it open to find another envelope, and upon it, written in a girl's fine hand:

"This never reached me till to-day,
"ROSE MERTON."

He glanced at the letter—his letter to Rose in June; and then, with a very savage exclamation, dashed out to the boy who had been sent to the farm with it, and frightened the lad into confessing that he did not deliver the letter to Miss Rose in person, but to two little girls, who were playing in the yard.

"I've half a mind to thrash you within an inch of your life," he muttered, as he flung a saddle on his horse; "and I may yet, too."

Then he dashed away into the darkness. And as he fairly flew over the frozen road, he came up with Rose before she reached the gates of her home.

"Rose, is it you?" he cried, throwing himself from his horse. And though she made no answer, he knew, and caught the tired, trembling girl in his arms.

"Is it you, darling? Tell me that—that—I do not come too late," and he knew by the way her head sank upon his shoulder what his answer was.

A few minutes later, Rose and her lover walked into Aunt Susan's presence, with such bright, happy faces, that they had no need to confess their secret, though she did declare, afterwards, that she "never was so flustrated in her life."

And Rose thought there had never been such a happy day in any girl's life, as was that New Year's Eve in hers, when the old lady kissed her kindly and said:

"Well, I'm glad for you, Rose. Yes, I'm glad, dear. You ought to be happy, and I know Mr. Dornton will do all in his power to make you so."

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at Spaulding's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at the above Drug Store.

A BREATH OF FIRE.—Dr. L. C. Woodman, of Paw Paw, Mich., contributes the following though incredible observation: I have a singular phenomenon in the shape of a young man living here, that I have studied with much interest, and I am satisfied that his peculiar power demonstrates that electricity is the nerve force beyond dispute. His name is Wm. Underwood, aged 27 years, and his gift is that of generating fire through the medium of his breath, assisted by manipulation with his hands. He will take anybody's handkerchief, and hold it in his mouth, rub it vigorously with his hands while breathing on it, and immediately it bursts into flames and burns until consumed. He will strip, and rinse out his mouth thoroughly, wash his hands, and submit to the most rigid examination to preclude the possibility of any humbug, and then by his breath blow upon any paper or cloth enveloping it in flames. He will, when out gunning and without matches, desirous of a fire, lie down after collecting dry leaves, and by breathing on them start the fire and then coolly take off his wet stockings and dry them. It is impossible to persuade him to do it more than twice in a day, and the effort is attendant with the most extreme exhaustion. He will sink into a chair after doing it, and on one occasion, after he had a newspaper on fire as narrated, I placed my hand on his head and discovered his scalp to be violently twitching as if under intense excitement. He will do it any time no matter where he is, under any circumstances; and I have repeatedly known of his sitting back from the dinner table, taking a swallow of water, and by blowing on his napkin, at once set it on fire. He is ignorant, and says that he first discovered his strange power by inhaling and exhaling on a perfumed handkerchief that suddenly burned while in his hands. It is certainly no humbug, but what is it? Does physiology give a like instance, and if so, where?—Michigan Medical News.

Probably the most remarkable deal of whist that was ever made occurred at a Cincinnati club the other day. After the first hand had been played, Mr. Webster, whose turn it was to deal, took the cards, shuffled them, and, after they had been cut by Mr. Kiersted, dealt. Each player, as he arranged his cards, appeared to be laboring under some unusual excitement. Mr. Culbertson, whose turn it was to play, and who generally is very prompt in placing his card on the table, delayed the play until Mr. Starbuck broke the ominous silence which prevailed by exclaiming: "Gentlemen, I have the most remarkable whist hand I ever held. I hold thirteen hearts." "And I," remarked Mr. Culbertson, "hold equally as remarkable a hand. I have thirteen spades." "And I," nervously said Mr. Kiersted, "have the thirteen diamonds." "Of course I hold the thirteen trumps," quickly chimed in the dealer, Mr. Webster. A case is said to have occurred in a Boston club, a year or so ago, where a player held the thirteen trumps, and also a similar case in a New York club, but such an instance as that recounted above has no example or precedent in the history of whist.

AN HONEST SERVANT.—Among the passengers in car No. 45 of the Naumkeag Street Railway, on its 8 o'clock trip from Salem to this town, yesterday morning, were a couple of young ladies employed at the Citizen office. The car arrived in town on time, and the young ladies having alighted, proceeded to the terminus of the route. On its backward trip the car stopped in front of the Citizen office, when the driver called at our sanctum to inquire if either of the young ladies had lost a pocket book, as he had found one in the car. The property was accurately described by one of the young ladies, who was not aware of her loss until the driver called, and it was restored to its owner. It is with pleasure that we make mention of this act, as it shows the honest heart of the driver (whose name we were unable to learn) who after finding the pocketbook, put himself to the trouble of hunting up its rightful owner. Truly "an honest man is the noblest work of God."—Beverly Citizen.

The children of Israel were once fed by manna sent from heaven. This was an undoubted case of "God-send." The amelioration of human ills and ailments has been often undertaken and as often failed. Ely's Cream Balm, however, "has been weighed in the balance and not found wanting." It is a sovereign, speedy, certain and pleasant cure for Catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands of persons have attested this fact. "Ely's Cream Balm is a God-send," writes Mrs. M. A. Jackson, of Portsmouth, N. H., on May 22d, 1882. "I had Catarrh for three years, had tried nearly all remedies but to no purpose. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed quite freely, and I thought the sores in it would never heal. Your Balm has cured me." This preparation is not a liquid or a snuff, and is easily applied. Can you, reader, afford to experiment with injurious irritants and injections when a pleasant cure is at hand?

Book Notices.

We have received the December number of Browne's Phonographic Monthly. The chief attraction this month is the large number of portraits and sketches of some of the best shorthand writers in America. It has, besides, lots of other matter interesting to stenographers. It is a double number and is alone worth more than the whole subscription price of $2.00. Single copies, 20 cents. D. L. Scott-Browne Publisher, 23 Clinton Place, N. Y.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for February, opens with a descriptive paper on "Saragossa," by S. P. Scott, which is well written and attractively illustrated. "Home-Life in Bombay" is graphic and lively, but does not present a seductive picture of the Indian city as a residence for Europeans and Americans. Edward C. Bruce writes of "Our Native Fauna" in a very pleasant semi-scientific strain. In the second installment of "The Jewel in the Lotos" the separate threads developed in the first are gathered up and woven together, giving promise of a strong and well-sustained interest as the story proceeds. The editorial departments are, as usual, well filled.

ST. NICHOLAS FOR FEBRUARY Celebrates St. Valentine's Day in capital style with an amusing story by Swett, called "A Queer Valentine," and one has but to read it to see the appropriateness of the title. A timely and thrilling article is Joaquin Miller's "In the Land of Clouds," which describes an ascent of Mount Hood by a party of tourists, and the loss and rescue of a little dog that insisted on accompanying the climbers. Of the serial stories, "The Tinkham Brothers' Tide-Mill," by J. T. Trowbridge, leaves its young heroes in a still more exciting position than last month. Mrs. Clement has an "Art and Artists" paper on the Flemish painters, with two beautiful reproductions of portraits of Rubens and his children, painted by the great artist himself. "The Story of the Field of the Cloth of Gold," contains an interesting account of a tournament, and is illustrated by the frontispiece—a charming picture by Birch, entitled "Margery's Champion." Besides this, and a good deal more, are poems and stories by Celia Thaxter, Frank H. Converse, Palmer Cox, a play by Mary Cowden Clarke, and pictures by Rosina Emmet, Elizabeth Thompson, Rose Miller, and others.

THE MIDWINTER CENTURY.—The beginning of a new story by W. D. Howells, in the Midwinter (February) CENTURY, is a literary event. The scene is once more Boston, but the social atmosphere and the purpose have undergone a complete change. The fourth part of the "Led Horse Claim," by Mary Hallock Foote, heightens the dramatic interest of this fascinating story which will end in the March number. Mrs. Burnett's "Through One Administration" is developing a new interest as it nears the conclusion. The short story of the number is a humorously fanciful tale, by Frank R. Stockton, entitled "The Spectral Mortgage." Two of the illustrated articles are noticeable for the number and excellence of the pictures, and appeal directly to the large number of readers who are interested in the development of American art. These are Mrs. Van Rensselaer's study of 'American Etchers,' and Miss Charlotte Adams' entertaining account of the life of "Artist's Models in New York." Especially noteworthy is the variety and excellence of the poetry in the February CENTURY, in "Bric-a-Brac" there is a clever parody by Helen Gray Cone, the author of the metrical satire on Walt Whitman and Oscar Wilde, in the November CENTURY, Called "Narcissus in Camden." In "Topics of the Time," the evil ways of many of the money kings are discussed under the title "Thieves and Robbers" also, the sensitiveness of Englishmen to American criticism; "Law-making at Albany;' and the movement to have works of art placed on the free list of the customs tariff. "Communications," "Literature" "Home and Society," and "The World's Work," treat a variety of topics, books, and useful inventions.

THE ELZEVIR LIBRARY.—A unique little semi-weekly magazine under this title has begun publication in New York. Each number is to contain a complete literary gem, a characteristic specimen of the best production of the brain of the author who is represented. The numbers taken together will form a beautiful little cyclopedia of the world's choicest literature. Price only two cents a number, or $2.00 a year. Number one contains Washington Irving's delightful story of Rip Van Winkle. Number two, Canon Farrar's graphic story of The Burning of Rome, and the persecution of the early christians under Nero. Other numbers following are "The Sea-Serpents of Science," by Dr Wilson: Tennyson's "Enoch Arden;" Goldsmith's "Deserted Village," "The Traveler," etc. Specimen copy sent free on request. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 18 Vesey Street, New York.

A FIREMAN'S FORTUNE.—The San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle, in an article on the Fire Department of San Francisco, gives the following from Asst. Chief Engineer, Matthew Brady: "I have been subject to an aggravating pain in my chest for over four years. I resorted to various modes of treatment to obtain relief. I have had my chest terribly blistered. No physician could tell what was the matter with me. Two weeks ago I commenced using St. Jacobs Oil. It has cured me."

HOW THE WORLD WENT RIGHT ALONG.

A Bear who had made himself believe that he had the worst luck of any animal in creation, was crawling through the woods one day, when he met a Serpent, who inquired:

"Which way now, my Friend?"

"I am going to find some Spot where I can retire from the World. The World has not used me right, and in revenge I will desert it."

"I wouldn't do that."

"But I will. I can no longer trust anybody. I have been cheated, lied to, and misused, until I have no faith left. I will now retire within myself, and if any convulsion of Nature takes place, the country must not blame me for it. I have borne all that one Bear can be expected to put up with."

Bruin went his way until he found a lonely spot, and then he crawled into a hole and began listening for the Crack of Doom. It made him feel good to think that the World was turning itself bottom side up because he had absented himself from sight and search, and he was determined not to yield until after several thousand terror-stricken people had come to him with tears in their eyes.

Much to Bruin's surprise, the night passed like all other nights. No one appeared during the forenoon to plead with him, and the afternoon passed without an Earthquake or Tornado.

He momentarily expected the advent of a crowd to plead with him to come back to the World, and have faith and confidence, but the crowd didn't show up. After a long and hungry night, Bruin began to weaken. After much argument with himself, he crawled out of his den, and was sneaking through the woods when he met a Hare.

"Is the World yet standing?" asked the Bear.

"Certainly, never more solid since I can remember."

"And is any one searching for me?"

"Not that I know of."

"Everything goes on just the same, eh?"

"Just the same."

"And didn't you hear that I had lost all faith in human nature, and retired from the World?"

"Never heard a word of it. Tra-la, old man, I'm off."

The Bear sat down on a thistle and thought the matter over for a few minutes, and then arose and made a bee line for his usual haunts, telling every animal he met on the way that he had been off on a fishing excursion.

MORAL:

The cynic who flatters himself that he is revenging on the world by withdrawing his company forgets that he will be obliged to associate with himself.

SHORT GUIDE TO BANKRUPTCY.

While one of the Bosnaic delegates who waited upon the Emperor Franz Josef, at the Hofburg, a few weeks ago, was staying in Vienna, the owner of the hotel in which he lodged became a bankrupt. Hearing of his host's mishap, the worthy Beg sought an explanation of the term "bankruptcy," and having thoroughly mastered its meaning, proceeded on his return to his native village, to impart his information to sundry of the Faithful, his near relatives and close family connections. "This, O my brothers," he observed, "is the true and proper way to become a bankrupt. First you must hire a shop. Then you write to rich merchants in far distant cities, inviting them to forward their wares to you for sale, and pledging yourself to pay for them within a few months. As soon as you shall have received sufficient merchandise you must sell it for cash or hide it carefully away. Then you must go to the Judge and say to him: 'Beloved of Allah! I am a bankrupt. Here are £5. They are all I have in the world.' The Judge will keep £4 of the £5, and proclaim you in bankruptcy; the other £1 will be divided among those who supplied you with goods. Later on you will remove to another town and begin this good and easy business over again. Thus may the passing bitterness of insolvency be converted into the abiding sweetness of a comfortable independence. Bechesm. Upon my head be it."

A LAKE IN CHANCERY.

The lake of Geneva has got into the law courts; it has been there for five years, and apparently is likely to stay there as long as if it had got into Chancery in England. The cause is one from which we are suffering at the present moment in England with regard to our rivers. The lake is subject to sudden floods which, in the summer, after a severe winter, cause great destruction on the lands of riparian owners. The owners on the upper part of the lake assert that it is owing to the obstructions to the outflow of the Rhone at Geneva. The Genevese assert that it is caused by the straightening of the Upper Rhone and drainage of the lands there. The Canton de Vaud is now suing the Canton Geneva before the Federal Court on the ground that early in the last century the Canton of Geneva promised the Canton of Berne to abate an obstruction, which they never did. Hence the evil. This allegation is something the same as if anyone were now to allege that our river floods were caused by a breach of the famous provision in Magna Charta that all weirs were to be pulled down on the Thames and throughout England.

We should not measure the excellence of our work by the trouble that it has cost us to produce it.

LINCOLN READS A POEM.

Honest Old Abe Entertains his Cabinet with a Little Quotation.

"Now, gentlemen, you all have more or less poetry in your souls; listen to this," and Abraham Lincoln, then President, rose from his chair, in his office in the White House, and read, in trembling tones, which indicated his own profound appreciation of it, Dr. O. W. Holmes' "Last Leaf," of which the following are two verses:

"They say that in his prime,
Ere the pruning knife of time
Cut him down;
Not a better man was found
By the crier in his round
Through the town.

Now the mossy marbles rest
On the lips that he had pressed
In their bloom;
And the names he loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb."

Mr. Michael Guilfoyle, of Binghamton, N. Y., is not as old as the venerable Boston citizen of whom the poet wrote with such tender pathos, yet he is more than three score and ten. "For the past eight of those years," he writes, "I have been a perfect cripple from rheumatism, hobbling about as best I could with my cane. I took PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and am now supple and strong as a gymnast. There is no trace of the disease left about me."

Mr. R. W. Mosher, wholesale druggist, of Binghamton, writes Messrs. HISCOX & CO., of New York—Proprietors of the Tonic—certifying to Mr. Guilfoyle's declaration.

Having all the properties of any preparation of ginger, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is a remedy of infinitely greater range and power. It cures all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood or imperfect digestion. Dyspepsia (and all its consequences), Malarial Fevers, Sick Headache, Kidney troubles, Bronchitis, and common Coughs and Colds, vanish at its touch. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Larger size the cheaper.

CORNER IN EXCUSES.—A middle-aged, fresh-looking, fleshy man, a little short of hair and breath, carrying a cane came into our office one morning this week, and after being seated and making some remark about the gorgeous surroundings, he said:

"I see Edison has got patents on over three hundred inventions. Now why don't he originate a new excuse, and confer a boon on suffering humanity?"

We admitted that Edison was a great inventor, but could not understand what the caller meant by a new excuse, and asked him what he had reference to.

"Why," said the man, as he took a cigar off the mantel, "what we want is a new excuse for staying out nights, an excuse that will have the resemblance of truth and sincerity. Now, I stay down town every night till about eleven o'clock, and I tell you it is a good deal of work to figure out excuses for my absence, different excuses, you know, so my wife will be good-natured."

"Have you ever tried the lodge racket and meeting a customer from the country?" we asked with a smile of reassurance.

"Oh, lodge be dashed," said he, as he scratched a match on his sleeve. "I have played all the lodges in town on her, until she does not believe a word of it, and it is humiliating to a sensitive man to be disbelieved. I have played the country customer dodge for twelve years, but last year I went out of business and since then I have been meeting old creditors among my former customers, to settle with them, until my old partner told my wife that I didn't have anything to do with settling the accounts of the firm, and for the last six months I have been attending committee meetings of several stock companies, in which I don't own a dollar of stock. I just keep watch of the papers, and when I see there is to be a meeting of anything, from the humane society to the little sisters of the poor, I use that as an excuse. I have tried everything to make things pleasant, but it seems to me all the excuses are exhausted, or the women have got on to the racket, and I do wish an editor or some smart man would think up a new excuse and charge us a royalty on it. I would be willing to pay."

"Did you ever try telling the truth about where you were nights, and what you were doing? Why not tell your wife right out that you have been out with the boys playing draw poker, and throw yourself on her mercy?"

"By George, it is a good idea. I never thought of that, I'll try it," and he went out jabbing his cane on the golden stairs. The next day we heard somebody rap at the door softly, and at the word "come in," the door opened and the man who wanted an excuse, limped in. He had a cloth tied around his head, over one eye, and a piece of black court plaster from his nose down under his ear. We asked him if he had tried telling the truth. Lifting the cloth from over his eye, and showing the worst looking eye that ever was, he said:

"Yes, I tried it, and if my life is spared I shall not tell the truth any more. I believe you knew she would hit me with the cover to a wash bowl. When I said I had been playing poker, she flew right off the handle and said she had mistrusted for years that she was wedded to a gambler, and that settled it. I said it was a lie, that I was not a gambler, but only played for exercise. I owe you one for this black eye," and taking a handful of cigars he limped out. Still, we maintain that the truth is the safest, generally.—Milwaukee Sun.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

CHEAPEST AND BEST BOOKS EVER MADE

We are now publishing a series of Standard and Popular works that we believe will be found the cheapest and best books ever made. They are all printed from large, clear type, on good paper, and very attractively bound in cloth, making them an ornament for any Library.

We are also publishing a new series under the name of "Lovell's Library" that gives all the best Current and Standard Fiction at prices equally as low as in any other form. Instead, however, of the large quarto broadsides we have adopted a neat 12mo size, with handsome cover, using large, clear type, mostly long primer, and making each number worthy of preservation.

The following gives a list of the numbers so far issued

In Handsome 12mo Vols., Large Type, Paper Covers.

1. Hyperion, Longfellow,	.20	20. The Spanish Nun, by De Quincey,	.10	35. The Cryptogram, Verne	.10

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

A RECENT ARTICLE in the North American Review on the "Decay of Protestantism" is worthy the attention of our readers. The authorship, as well as spirit of the article, indicate that it is written from a Catholic standpoint. It is all the more entitled to consideration, therefore, as showing the light in which the different aspects of the religious question are regarded by that church. This decay of the protestant religion, is manifest, according to the writer, 1st, in Church creeds; 2d, Church government and ministry, and 3d, in Church membership and attendance at church worship services. It is not our purpose to discuss in detail these points, but simply to refer to the matter of attendance on public worship. The writer states that it is not his intention in the article to "present a comparison with Catholicity," yet the only proof attempted in support of his point of attendance is a direct comparison between the Protestant and Catholic churches. To show that there is decay in attendance at the Protestant houses of worship he says: "On the 16th of April, 1882, the Boston Advertiser caused a census to be taken with this result: in 160 Protestant Churches 75,572 worshipers were counted; and in 30 Catholic Churches, 49,337." Similar comparisons are made in Philadelphia, New Haven, St. Louis and other large cities. There is no attempt, by a comparison with any former estimate, or census, to show a diminution, which is the essence of decay.

It will be granted, for the sake of argument, that there is a decadence in attendance in our Protestant houses of worship; it will not be denied, also, that the attendance has always been, and is now, proportionately larger in the Catholic churches. There are two reasons for this, which we will recall, and which do not show a decay in Protestantism.

The increasing dissimilarity in attendance between the Catholics and Protestants is not due to natural causes. For the past twenty years Catholicism has increased in this country by emigration. To our shores have come people from every land and clime, but among them the largest number were members of the Catholic communion. The increase in the Protestant churches has only kept pace with our natural growth in point of numbers, with few, if any additions, especially in New England, from emigration. Again, a comparison between the attendants at the churches of the Catholic and Protestant communions, even granting that it is disastrous to the Protestants, is not a proof of the decay of Protestantism. With the Catholic church it is a fair estimate of strength; because attendance at church with them is a sacred duty. The children are taught after being confirmed that they are never out of the pale of the church; and their devotedness in the performance of the duties they owe to the church is a matter beyond denial, and worthy of imitation. With the Protestant churches, however, it is a different matter. Attendance on divine worship is not regarded as a duty, unless to it is added the inclination of the worshiper. The attendance at the churches, even on a special service, would not be a fair numerical representation of the strength of Protestantism. There are many among us, who are not communicants, who are not even attendants at church, but who, in the principle which separates the Protestant church from the Catholic, sympathize with the former. In the common acceptance of the term, they are Protestants. To charge that they are atheists or infidels is begging the question. We do not so regard them. They are as much of a protestant against the Catholic church, as was Martin Luther at the time of the reformation, although their views on many matters of religious doctrine would be found totally at variance.

Protestantism differs from Catholicism in this, that difference of opinion, even on cardinal points, is tolerated within its fold. Its numbers can not be measured by attendance or non attendance at any or all of the stated services in the houses of worship. Whether such difference is to the credit of Catholicism or otherwise, is not within the province of this article. The lack of attendance is to be regretted, and in this our church would do well to copy from the Catholic. But Protestantism, as such, is not on the decline, however much lack of attendance at worship may indicate it to the mind of our Catholic brother.

AS WE HAVE before intimated, we do not think the safety of the Republican party turned upon the election of a Senator of the United States. No danger, but rather unity has come to the party, by the settlement of the question. Had it turned out otherwise—had another man been chosen instead of Senator Hoar, it would have been no triumph for the democrats, for one of their party could not have been elected. The abuse which has been gratuitously heaped upon Ex-Gov. Long, since and during the result, will surely re-act. Not for the part he has taken, for he took no part in the contest. His friends voted for him, as they had a right to do, without his suggestion or advice. Their preference for him was just as lawful, showed just as much loyalty to the Republican party as was the preference of Hoar's friends for him. Yet Hoar's friends say he should have withdrawn. Because he was not as good a republican as Hoar? Not at all. Because General Butler was supposed to favor him, and because he owed something to the party which had honored him. Just here there is a point which seems to have been forgotten. It is by no means certain that the democrats would have transferred their united allegiance to Long. They showed little indication of it. It was a surmise on the part of the Hoar leaders, and used to terrify the weaker members. Had Senator Hoar not been elected on the second day of balloting, it by no means assured the election of Long. This could only have been done by the aid of the entire democratic representation. Then why this talk of Long being a political corpse? Is the obligation between Ex-Gov. Long and the party all on one side? Did not he lead the party to victory when, under a less popular leader, there was strong reason to fear the opposite result? And would not his leadership at the last election have been equivalent to the defeat of Butler? We are perfectly satisfied with the election of Senator Hoar. He was chosen fairly and honorably and by the vote of a very large majority of the republican representatives. We believe he will bring no disgrace but rather honor to Massachusetts. But, for this reason, we cannot cast odium upon John D. Long. His part in the contest has been equally honorable and worthy of approval.

THE FAIR which is contemplated by the newly formed firemen's relief association should be extensively patronized by our citizens. Three thousand tickets have been issued and every one of them should be taken. The object of the fair, as is well known, is to establish a fund for the relief of disabled firemen. Such an association is in existence in most of our large cities and towns, and at the banquet given in Upton's hall, a short time since, the object of such an association was favorably mentioned, and received the hearty sympathy as far as it could be expressed, of the citizens there present. Our firemen are liable to need the aid which will be furnished by the association, at any moment. They are prompt and efficient in their duty, heeding no risks, thinking of no danger, when the property and valuables of our citizens are threatened with destruction by fire. At such times who can foresee calamity? To any who may become disabled on duty, risking their life for the preservation of property, the association comes as a helper and an aid. Our citizens cannot afford to withheld their sympathy, and financial support. Let us all see to it that it is a success in every respect, and that a handsome sum of money is added to the fund for which the fair is inaugurated.

THE QUESTION of compulsory payment of employes is again being agitated in the legislature. We do not believe any bill in this direction can be framed, which shall be satisfactory to the people. The employment and payment of labor must be and should be a question between the employers and employes. With it no outside parties should interfere. And while the principle of weekly or semi monthly payments is a good one, and which is growing in favor, there are many exceptions which must remain so, or business suspended. No body of legislators can be acqualnted with the financial success or difficulties of manufacturers or corporations. We grant there are many companies who are abundantly able to make weekly payments to their help,—but do not. It is unfortunate. But there are others who do not, and cannot. Such a law would do no good to business, but a great injury, in that many laborers would be thrown entirely out of employment, if its provisions were rigidly enforced.

THE CONFESSION of night clerk Delaney of the Newhall house in Milwaukee, is a sad commentary on human nature. Twenty-five minutes elapsed,—time enough to have given personal warning to all of the guests,—ere he attended to that duty. The valuables of his employer in the sate were of more consequence, to his mind, than the lives of those who were doomed, if aid could not immediately reach them. After such an exhibition, we wonder at the expressions of hope, which are made in some of the Western papers, that a new hotel be built and placed under the charge of the former landlord of the Newhall house. The public will surely hold him responsible for the direliction of his clerk, and would give a new hotel under his charge a wide birth. There would be reason for it, especially if the clerk himself should be employed.

THE ROBBERY at West Peabody should recall the danger of leaving securities or notes of any value in our dwelling houses. It is a custom which we fear is too prevalent at the present time. When there is provided by the different Safe Deposit Companies, in Boston, a place of security, for a very insignificant sum, in comparison with the safety of the valuables, it would seem as if they ought to be availed of. There is absolutely no possibility of loss. The preservation and care of the securities left there are made a business The owner himself cannot obtain access to them without the aid of the attendant, who must be able to recognize him personally. Those who are cautious in regard to the safety which our banks afford, can find no need for such timidity in regard to these institution. The lesson of this robbery should prove a warning in this respect.

A visit at this time of the year to the store of JOHN P. PEABODY is of great advantage to the housewife who is on the lookout for bargains. Mr. Peabody believes in clearing out his stock of seasonable goods at the end of each season; with this object in view he has always held closing out sales at which articles which otherwise would be carried over are offered at prices which must ensure their immediate sale. If we are not mistaken, Mr. Peabody was the first to inaugurate this system in Salem, and it is one secret of his success. Just now, he is offering bargains in every department, but especially in black silks and black velvets. If any of our lady readers are thinking of purchasing any of these goods during the year, we advise them to visit Mr. Peabody's store and look at his prices on these goods.

Mr. Samuel Roads, Jr., has recently compiled what is called the Marblehead Manual. It is a neat little hand-book and contains much valuable information: the names of the selectmen and representatives to the General Court, which have been carefully compiled from the records, alone being worth the entire price of the book.

PEABODY.

Early last Monday evening the family of Mr. James Wilkins on Lowell street thought they smelled smoke at his residence, and on attempting to enter a room in which a fire had recently been kindled in an open fire place, a dense cloud of smoke rushed out. They went in however and succeeded in drenching out the flames. It is supposed to have originated by a spark setting fire to some cotton cloth which was on a sofa. The sofa, sofa pillow, a shawl and mat were badly burned. It was a narrow escape.

Mrs. Emily H., wife of Rev. George N. Anthony, formerly pastor of the Congregational church in this town, died at her home in Newton Highlands Sunday afternoon. She was a daughter of the late Leonard Poole, and had many friends here. She married Mr. Anthony about two years ago and has resided in Newton since that time. She was a lady of rare musical attainments, having been a successful teacher of music here previous to her marriage. Her funeral took place to-day, and it is understood that her remains were taken to Andover for interment.

A serious fire occurred at Tapleyville last Sunday morning. The large shoe manufactory of Martin, Clapp & French was entirely consumed. The factory was 150 feet long, 40 feet wide and four stories high; was built of wood and was owned by Walter T. Martin and G. Augustus Tapley. The fire spread to three dwelling houses east of the factory, occupied by poor families who lost nearly their entire household effects. The large building owned and occupied by Nathaniel P. Merriam was badly scorched and charred, as was also the residence of Mr. Joseph H. Hyam, and the drug store of Thorndike Hawkes in the vicinity. The loss of Messrs. Martin & Co. is some $80,000, and on the building some $10,000. The property was insured through the agency of O. B. Chadwick & Co. of Peabody and Danvers. The origin of the fire is supposed to have been a defective flue near the boiler. Assistance was sent for and Steamer 1 of this town responded and did good service.

Mr. George A. Lawrence has recently invented a brushing machine to be used on leather. This machine consists of a shaft suspended by hangers to the ceiling, upon which is a loose and fixed pully, at one end of which is a pair of beveled gears, changing the direction of the power and continuing through a ball joint to a telescope shaft at the end of which is another ball joint. The shaft is then continued through the handle and shield at the end of which is the rotary brush which revolves about 250 times a minute. The brush is made detachable and any quality of brush can be used. The whole machine is less than one hundred pounds weight, and is drawn with a two inch belt. It will adjust itself to any angle or uneven surface. It is to be used on leather, after it is blacked, or can be used for polishing sheepskins or any work where brushes are used. It can also be used as a polishing machine on wood or metal. John E. Clement & Co., at their machine shop on Wallis street, are constructing one of these machines and it will probably be in operation there some time next week.

We call attention to the advertisement of the UNION PATENT MEDICINE CO., of Salem, to be found in another column. This establishment opened its doors some months since, inaugurating the system of lower prices on patent medicines. They met with remarkable success, and they now keep a full line of drugs, of all kinds, to be found in a well appointed drug store, at the same uniformly low prices. It will pay our readers to look in at their store when in Salem.

A friend of the editor with a thoroughly practical turn of mind in this season of a scarcity of eggs, makes the following suggestion:

"A queen bee lays in the height of the season from 2000 to 3000 eggs in twenty-four hours. The man who will discover how to graft a queen bee on a hen will make money enough to buy out the whole continent in six months."

In the Massachusetts legislature there are 36 lawyers, 23 farmers, 15 manufacturers, 11 merchants, 11 real-estate agents, 8 grocers, 6 boot and shoe manufacturers, 6 physicians, 5 clerks, 5 builders, 3 editors, 3 shoemakers and 3 stable-keepers. Mr. W. J. Florence, on Monday evening, and T. W. Keene in Richard III, last evening, attracted audiences composed of the best people in Salem and vicinity, and fully sustained the reputation of Moulton & Johnson in their efforts to cater to the wants of the public.

WEST PEABODY.—This usually quiet neighborhood, and in fact the town itself was considerably stirred last Saturday at the report of a daring burglary at the house of Geo. A. Needham, a well-to-do farmer who was born and always lived in this part of the town, being a son of the late Benj. Needham. Between one and four o'clock last Friday afternoon, while Mr. Needham was in Salem, he left a young man named Edward Dennison, who had been in his employ for some time, in charge of the house. Dennison took the opportunity to help himself to a lot of valuables and then left for parts unknown. Mr. Needham did not discover his loss until the next day when it was found that $2600 in Government bonds; $1300 in notes of hand; 945 shares of mining stock of little value; eleven small and three large silver spoons, a razor, overcoat, under coat and vest, a gold ring and a few smaller articles had been stolen. The police were immediately notified, but in the mean time the young man had been arrested in Boston while trying to pawn one of the bonds. He gave the name of Geo. Needham. He was brought to Peabody and came before Justice Merrill this morning and was bound over to the May term of the Superior Court in the sum of three thousand dollars. Most of the property has been recovered except a $100 bond (which was given to a stranger at Chelsea), the overcoat, razor and ring. The latter are in pawn shops where they can be recovered. The overcoat was pawned for $1.50, the under coat for 75 cents and the silver spoons for $2.50. This is not the first time Dennison has been arrested. He figured in the police court some time ago and was convicted of drunkenness.

The West Peabody Farmers' Club held a lively and interesting debate at their meeting last Friday evening, opened by James P. King Esq., and followed by Rev. Mr. Spaulding and J. Fred Ingraham. The discussion next Friday evening will be opened by Mr. Ingraham.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At a special meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Peabody Institute, held on the 29th day of January, 1883, it was voted:—

That the Trustees have received the announcement of the death of their late associate, Mr. George Upton, with deep emotion and sincere regret.

During the time he has been a member of the Board Mr. Upton has faithfully discharged all the duties assigned him, has taken an intelligent and active interest in the conduct of the affairs of the Institute, and has cordially co-operated in every proper effort to promote its beneficent objects and to increase and extend its usefulness.

In all our deliberations his good sense and honest purposes, enlivened and enforced by his bright and cheerful manners and speech, have given strength and tone to our counsels, and in doubt or despondency have imparted courage and hope.

Gifted by nature with intellectual powers of more than usual strength and vigor, developed by the best culture which our own schools could impart, and sharpened and broadened by early and continued exercise in large and varied business pursuits, with correct principles and of exemplary life and conversation, ardent, energetic, public spirited and enterprising, with a fine, manly presence and genial and winning manners and address, and apparently in the very bloom of healthy and vigorous manhood, Mr. Upton gave promise of a long, active and successful career, and of repeating that high example of public usefulness which in several generations of his family had been so honorably illustrated in this community.

And now that in the midst of his busy career, of his generous aims and large designs, of his domestic joys and public labors, death has suddenly closed all things on earth, we, his associates, while we take to heart the lesson which this providence so impressively teaches, would express our sincere appreciation of the virtues which graced his character and adorned his life, and our deep sense of the loss of a friend and faithful laborer which this Board and the Institute have sustained, and of the great loss which our whole community has suffered in the death of one of its best and most esteemed citizens.

Voted, That the Trustees attend in a body the funeral of our late associate and friend, and that a copy of record of this action of the Board be sent to the family of the deceased, in token of our heartfelt sympathy with them in their sad bereavement.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

We are called upon to perform a sad duty, in recording the decease of George Upton, of this town. It is sad, because of the loss sustained by the family, to whom he was bound by the most endearing ties, and by our whole town of which he was an upright, useful and honored citizen. "He will be missed," is heard everywhere on our streets ; yet this stereotyped expression carries with it a deeper and more significant meaning when applied to him whose life had been one of such activity among us.

Mr. Upton was the eldest son of the late Elijah W. and Louisa (King) Upton, and was born in this town July 8, 1837. After finishing his education at school, he entered the factory of the Essex Glue Co., of which firm his father was a member. Soon after, Spaulding's liquid glue began to acquire considerable reputation in this country.—Mr. Upton conceived the idea of making a glue which should compete with Spaulding's, and in this he succeeded, at the same time being in the employ of the Glue Co. It had a large sale, and this was his first venture in the glue business for himself. In 1866, the factory occupied by him was built by his father for his especial use, since which time his business in the manufacture of glue has been entirely distinct from that of the GlueCo. Mr. Upton was an active worker ; and his business of the manufacture of glue soon developed into large proportions. In the latter years of the war, he built the large glue and rendering establishment at Brighton, which was afterwards sold, and is now property of J. O. Whitten. In addition to his glue business here, he had a manufactory near Chicago, giving prospect of a thriving business and was at different times interested in other enterprises.

Mr. Upton was anxious and ready to seize upon any improvements for the increase of his business ; it was this constant anxiety and watchfulness that caused him to succumb at last, when his vital forces became exhausted. He was the only man in town to introduce the system of electric lighting into his factory. He was kind and generous to his employes ; as was well said by Rev. Mr. Hudson, if the same harmonious and cordial relations existed between employer and employes, generally, as existed between Mr. Upton and those in his employ, we should hear less of the disturbances between labor and capital. Mr. Upton was a constant attendant at the Unitarian church, in whose prosperity he was much interested. His genial hospitality will be long remembered by those to whom it was tendered, as well as his charity by many in town to whom in a modest and unassuming way, he extended a kindly hand and a more substantial aid.

The disease which terminated his life had been for some time developing. The physician advised him months ago to rest; but his active brain could not cease from its labors, and the result, for which he was not unprepared, came. He was cheerful to the last, bidding his friends here good bye with an assurance of meeting them as well as those loved ones who had preceded him, "in the morning."

The funeral was attended on Monday afternoon by a large number of friends; the trustees of the Peabody Institute, of which he was one, attended in a body; a large bank of flowers in the form of a cross supported the casket, which was placed in the east parlor. Rev. J. W. Hudson officiated, and the remains were privately interred after a short service at the grave, in the King Cemetery.

Mr. Upton leaves a wife, Mrs. Marian C., two sons, King and Roger, and a large number of relatives. His age was 45 years, 6 months and 18 days.

This morning as a horse belonging to Mr. Henry C. Torr and attached to a tan cart was backing up to the old wool shop on Foster street, the bank of the brook near by gave way and the horse was thrown head first into the brook, breaking probably his neck and killing him instantly. Mr. Ames was sent for and removed the animal. Mr. Torr has owned the horse for some time and he was a valuable animal.

Mr. Geo. A. Walton, of the State Board of Education, is visiting the schools in all the towns in the state for the purpose of finding out how well the lower grades prepare for the higher It would be of great benefit to our schools to have more frequent visits from Mr. Walton, as he gives many important hints to the teachers and committees on methods of teaching and needs of the different schools.

As large an audience will greet Little Corinne as visited the Institute at Mr. Hooper's first show. This means a great deal, and we congratulate Mr. Hooper on his success.

Mr. Edwin B. Balcom has just completed a large two story house on Central street for William Bushby, at which we were privileged to take a look, one day last week. Mr. Balcom is architect as well as builder, and the plan of the house, including the finish of the interior, which is of a novel and original design, was devised by him. The house is not built for show; it has a solid, substantial look, showing good workmanship and taste on the part of both owner and builder. The front entrance, which is directly on the street, is up a flight of stone steps, through a portico, and heavy doors of a unique finish, to the large hall, which is nearly in the center of the house. The large double doors on the right which are thrown open, show us at once the parlor. It is a room 14 by 20, with white marble mantel, and opening into the hall as it does, with doors hung on a Prescott patent hanger, it gives the room an appearance much larger than it really is. With this Prescott hanger, the doors slide almost noiselessly, and it is a great improvement over the old method of sliding doors. On the opposite side of the hall is the sitting room, 14 x 15 with clear white mantel, of marble, opening directly to the dining room in the rear. Between the room is a marble lavatory, and in the dining room we find that cheerful aspect which should pervade such rooms. It is 12 x 14, with a bay window, an open fire-place, and mantel of Tennessee marble, and finished entirely in ash--the panels and wood work having been especially designed by Mr. Balcom. From this room, a large closet connects at once with the kitchen, through which by a slide direct conveyance is made to that room. At the rear of the large hall is a small room 9 x 14 also finished in ash, which will be used by Mr. Bushby as a library, and the entrance to the kitchen is also from this hall and the hall from a side door. In this room which is 12 x 18 are all the conveniences for the housewife. It is finished in hard wood, with maple floor, and is connected directly with the dining room, through a closet or pantry, where are facilities for keeping flour and all the necessaries of cooking. There is also a shed in the rear, connected with the house, with closets. Up stairs, we find a hall so arranged that from it entrance is made to every room in the main body of the house. The rooms on the right are divided differently from below, and their size is more similar to each other. The chamber over the dining room is finished for a blue room, the painting being done with a blue tint, which with the other furnishings must make a very handsome as well as cheerful appearance. In the rear, also opening from the hall, is bath room, finished in ash, with tub, set bowl, and closets. Ash is also used for the stairs of the back entrance and the hall at the upper landing. The attic is unfinished. The cellar is cemented throughout, and a door leads directly to the ground. The house is heated by a Winthrop furnace, and is furnished with gas and hot and cold water. The work gives evidence of a thoroughness of detail which cannot but be satisfactory to the owner. Besides the work of Mr. Balcom, under whose supervision the whole was constructed, the mason work was done by Alfred Berry, the painting by Richard Skinner of Salem, the plumbing and piping by Daniel B. Lord, Jr. and the furnace set by Norton & Gilman. The house is nearly ready for occupancy, and is an ornament to the portion of our town in which it is located.

A very pleasant wedding took place last Wednesday evening at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. E. W. Jacobs' on Lowell street. The interested parties were Mr. Silas Chase, salesman at Messrs. Goldthwaite & Bixby's in Salem and Helen, daughter of Mr. E. W. Jacobs. Rev. W. G. Sperry was the officiating clergyman, and S. W. King, E. W. Abbott of Peabody and Frederick Poor and John E. Newhall of Salem acted as groomsmen. The bride was attired in white silk and tulle. The company present numbered about one hundred guests from Peabody, Salem and Boston. The wedding gifts were elegant and costly. There was a pleasant reception after the ceremony and the couple left for an extended wedding tour. Mr. and Mrs. Chase will reside in Peabody.

"OUR JIM."

"You want to see my boy Jim?" said the old man, querulously. "Well, you'll have to travel a long way first, I reckon, for he don't live here, nor hasn't for the past ten years; he was too smart for me, was Jim—knew a heap more than his old dad—wanted to sit idle and run the farm by machinery, talked about science and kemistry and the like, was sassy and disobedient, and he went away like the prodigal son, only he ain't never come back yet.

"What do you say? Dead? Mebbe so, mebbe no—the ways of God are past findin' out! All I know is I did my dooty by him. He was well raised, but he nigh onto broke our hearts, his mother's and mine! She was kind of easy with him—women are soft creatures ennyway—but I did by him as my father did by me, and he was a God-fearing, God-serving man! I never let him go to a circus in his life, though he would run away and get in somehow, and I mirded Solomon's precepts not to spare the rod and spoil the child. 'What is that? Beat him?' Of course I beat him and tried to get the Old Adam outen him, and the more I whipt him the more carnal natur he showed. I kept him at work from mornin' till night, accordin' to good old Doctor Watts-his-name:

> "'For Satan finds some mischief stiff
> For idle hands to do.'

"Twan't a bit of use! The boy was bound to go to the bad! He learned keerds and hoss racin', and began to talk inpions—said there was no harm in ownin' a fast hoss, and that there wasn't a bit of sin in playin' keerds, and wanted to bring 'em into the house. Why, I'd a-burned the ruff over my hed fust! And I had to fight 'em both. His mother was that soft and womanish; said she'd learn to play to keep him at home, and thought mebbe the Lord would forgive her, and she a purfessor, too! Oh, it was hard, but I did my dooty. I told him he could go and make his bed, and ez he made it he'd have to lie in it, but we wouldn't have him bringing his rioting companions into our fold. So he chose his way and went, and, stranger, we've never set our eyes on him or heerd from him since. I told him he was no son of mine, nor could he touch a penny of my hard earnin's, and then he asked if I begrudged him my love, and I told him I had no fellowship with unbelievers, and he cried a little—he was soft like his mother—and that was the last I see of him. I don't mind tellin' you it has worried me some that I wasn't stricter with him, and I've prayed to be forgiven if I ever let him have his own way, but he was elected to be lost. I 'spose it's in the plan of salvation.

"What's that? You've seen him. Well, now, if he is acquainted with a likely looking young man like you, he can't be very far astray.

"I kind of conceited my instructions might follow him. There's the very strap I used to lather him with, stranger. I've allus kept it to remind me that I did my dooty! And you've seen Jim? How does he look? Favors me, don't he? Well! well! and you say he's made money? Not hoss racin'? No! in a good business! Well, now, I'm real glad he didn't turn out so bad arter all; but he couldn't very well, when both his father and mother are purfessors—and that boy knew the Westminster Catekism by heart when he was nine years old, and I mind now a whippin' I give him for sayin' he 'hated the old thing.' Awful speech, wasn't it? But he was just that unregenerate! And you're his best chum?

"Mother, come here and see Jim's chum.

"That's his mother comin' now; she's kind of weak and foolish about Jim! Lord! what's the matter of the woman?

"Why, she's kissin' and a-cryin' over the stranger.

"What! our Jim?

"No! that likely young man our bad boy Jim?

"Well! well! the ways of the Lord are past findin' out.

"Now, you see, mother, what's come of my allus doin' my dooty by that boy."—M. Quad.

STUFFING AN ELEPHANT.

The carcass of an elephant, who last year figured prominently in a circus, is now being prepared for exhibition in the National Museum at Washington. All the bones have been preserved and have been cleaned, and are now being carefully articulated. When this is completed, the elephant in his bones and the elephant in his skin will be set up, side by side, on pedestals in the National Museum, and an unprejudiced public can judge as to the prospective merits of these costumes for summer wear. The method employed in preparing such a huge mass as this elephant for the museum is a very interesting one. As the bones were to be used, another skeleton had to be made. This was effected by building a wooden framework of the proper dimensions. Over this framework tow was spread, and on the top was placed a coating of soft mud. The skin was then drawn over, and the pliable mud foundation preserved all the irregularities of the skin, so that it looks exactly as it did when on the live elephant. The trunk hangs in a natural position, with the end slightly curled up from the ground. The eyes, made by a celebrated optician, are exact counterfeits of the natural eye; so that, when the elephant gets mounted on its pedestal in the museum, it will look deceitfully alive and active.

Merit is born with men; happy those with whom it dies.

Man pardons and forgets; woman pardons only.

A STARTLING STATEMENT!

Corroborated by the Chief of Police.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1881.

DR. CHARLES CRAIG—Dear Sir: Suffering as I have been for a long time with a fearful cold, that finally settled into what is termed quick consumption, and so pronounced by the attending physician, I heard of your Consumption Cure, and while having little faith in anything benefitting me, procured some of it, used it, and to day am, to the wonder of myself and friends, a well man.—I write this, as I feel in duty bound to do, for the benefit of suffering humanity, and can but hope that the thousands who are now suffering with that supposed incurable disease Consumption will try your Consumption Remedy. They will receive speedy relief and a permanent cure. You can send any one to me who cares to be advised as to the manner in which your medicines cured me.
P. H. SULLIVAN, Captain Police.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 14, 1882.

We, the undersigned, are personally acquainted with Captain P. H. Sullivan. We knew of his debilitated condition at one time, are knowing to the fact that he is now daily on duty, and are satisfied he would not make any statement that was not strictly true.

THE STYLES IN JEWELRY.

"There is a run upon classic styles in jewelry," a fashionable jeweler said, "especially in ear-rings. What is the most popular? A large golden hoop, made of perfectly plain yellow gold. They are expensive because they need to be deftly carved. An intricate design is most used. The antique patterns prevail, as the fashion demands a reproduction of the styles of the days of Cleopatra. But modern ladies are not at all content with chaste simplicity, and the loops must be heavily studded with jewels for those who mean to promenade the piazzas at Saratoga. These loops have always been worn by gypsy women. We would not confess that in getting up the fashion, and so we called them Egyptian, Pompeiian, Assyrian, Indian or Roman jewelry."

"I observe you have the sunflower in jewelry?"

"Yes, and we are indebted to Oscar Wilde for making it popular. The use of the topaz with fine frosted gold gives us a good sunflower, while an amethyst does duty for a pansy, and pearls and topazes can be worked up for the daisy. The very white shade that silver can now be made to take is useful in making flowers into jewelry. There is no new way of setting diamonds, except in flowers. The single stones of value are very simply mounted, silver being the best setting, and are worn close to the ear.

"There is now an odd fancy about ear-rings. Two of a kind are no longer scrupulously held to be a pair, but odd stones are worn as a pair. You will see a pink pearl on one ear and a black one on the other, or you will see a diamond on one ear and a clear white pearl on the other. A Turkish grandee who was in this country some years ago commented upon the poverty of design in the ear-rings of American women. He said that the ear-rings, as a feature of personal decoration, did not seem to be appreciated; that the odalisques in the harems wore the most beautiful ear-rings of any women in the world, and that, what was better, they designed them, there being no more exquisite taste in jewelry than that of the Sultana. I know of no fortunes in odd ear-rings in New York, and if the fashion of Cleopatra's days is adopted, it is not likely that her extravagance in jewelry will be imitated, for the pair of ear-rings she wore before Antony is said to have cost over half a million dollars."—*N. WHY THE PYRAMIDS WERE BUILT.

A traveler who has recently visited the great pyramids writes from Cairo to the Philadelphia Inquirer as follows: Wiser heads than mine have cogitated over the construction of these curious erections, and it would not be out of place for me here to offer a few suggestions on the subject; but I haven't any. Accepting the theory that the pyramids were erected as receptacles for the royal mummies, and their interiors are built exactly upon the plan of the hundreds of tombs in their immediate neighborhood; first, a reception chamber; second, a well leading down to (third) a cave for the reception of the mummy. We must agree that the Egyptian kings had most implicit faith in their theories concerning the future state. They believed that after death the mummy must remain undisturbed for 1,452 years, if eternal bliss was to be attained. During these years a sort of preparation was undergone—trial, test, purification, polishing, &c.—to fit the soul for its final condition. If the mummy was disturbed, then eternal misery would follow. How, then, thought the Egyptian philosopher and king, can I best secure the undisturbed seclusion of my mummy for the required number of years? It was a point he could not decide, and one day, as he sat upon the sand in apparently idle contemplation, he was chided by his wife for idleness, "so unbecoming in a King." "I have it," he answered, without responding to her acrimony. "I have it! Look you! When I allow this sand to fall from my hand, it returns not to the level of its fellows, but coming, as it does from the hand of royalty, lifts itself into a tower of strength, of which it is indeed a model. So it is in your kitchen with your lentils and your rice and the flour with which you form your pastries. So are the banks of the Nile when the inundation is ended; so the corn in the granary, the debris from the quarries—all, all fall thus, and are typical of strength and indestructibility. Thus will I build the tombs in shape, which are to hold us after our lives here are ended." And thus old Cheops and his followers builded better than they knew.

HOUSEKEEPING ON A LARGE SCALE.

The imperial household of China is probably unsurpassed in extent, there being married to the Emperor not only the chief wife, who is the Empress, but also nine under-wives of the first-class, twenty-seven of the second, and eighty-one of the third, on all of whom unnumbered servants wait. It may easily be believed that the imperial porcelain factories of Kin-tih-chin forwarded to the palace for their use, in the year 1877, eleven thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight articles, consisting of fish-bowls, flower-vases and ornamental jars of the first quality, and inferior products in proportion.

If you would do good to your race, you must love mankind; if you would make that love effectual, you must give yourself for the race.

If religion does not make a man heartsome and pleasant at home, it is of no particular benefit to a family.

OF A MASSACHUSETTS ENGINEER—TIMELY WARNING OF MR. JOHN SPENCER, BAGGAGE MASTER OF THE B. & A. R. R.

From the Pittsfield, (Mass.,) Eagle.

Stone in the Bladder is at once a most annoying and very dangerous ailment; but many most remarkable cures have of late been wrought by "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy"—the invention of Dr. Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y. Another striking case is now added to the list. Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., states in a letter to Dr. Kennedy that he had been troubled with bladder complaint for 14 years, and had consulted at different times seven physicians; but nothing beyond temporary allayment of the pain had been worked for him. Towards the end of last January Mr. Lawler called on Dr. Kennedy. Sounding him, the doctor "struck stone." He decided that Mr Lawler should first try the "Favorite Remedy," so as, if possible, to avoid an operation. And here is the remarkable result: "Dear Doctor Kennedy—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. If you would like to see the stones I will send them to you." This letter bears date "Dalton, Mass., Feb. 6," and is signed "Peter Lawler." The stones, which are so large as to warrant for "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" the claim that it is the most successful specific for Stone yet discovered, are now in Dr. Kennedy's possession. Incidentally Mr. Lawler also states that the "Favorite Remedy" at the same time cured him of a stubborn case of rheumatism; and it is a fact that in all affection arising out of disorders of the liver or urinary organs it is a searching remedy and works marvelous benefits. It is in itself almost a medicine chest. Order it of your druggist. Price $1 a bottle. Jan 17

ALMOST AS BAD.

What the Perplexed Physicians do in Cases of Emergency.

"I'll tell you the honest truth," answered the doctor. "Bright's Disease bothers the medical men almost as badly as cancer does. Having passed a certain stage, both point straight to eternity. It may be unprofessional to let out the secret, but whenever a patient comes to me with Bright's Disease, or any kidney trouble acting like it, I tell him to put on BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER without delay."

The doctor spoke by the card. The Capcine goes right to the spot. If you can be helped, the Capcine will do it. Look out for frauds. Is the word CAPCINE cut in the middle of the plaster? If so, you are all right. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York. Highest awards. jan 17

Miscellaneous.

POPULARIZED BY SUBTERFUGE.

About the year 1530 the potato was carried from Peru into Spain, and from Spain to the gardens of Italy, Germany and Flanders. In 1588, an inhabitant of Arras first drew attention to its culinary value; but prejudice was so strong against it that it did not come into use. In 1595, Gaspard Baulim succeeded in effecting its introduction to certain parts of the environs of Lyons and the mountains of the Vosges.

Philosophers, however, said it must be injurious, because it was a sort of nightshade, and the populace had a notion that its use gave rise to scurvy. In this state of bare toleration the potato remained in France until the year 1783, when the naturalist Parmentier commenced a series of potato banquets to his friends. Potatoes, nothing but potatoes, on these occasions, appeared before the guests. All the genius, however, of French cookery was invoked to impart to them agreeable forms and savory tastes.

This was the naturalist's first step. His second was still more extraordinary. Having planted a considerable breadth of potatoes at Montreuil, near Paris, he gained an audience of the unfortunate Louis XVI., in the course of which he inspired his majesty with his ideas of the value of the potato.

"But how are we to make people eat what they are prejudiced against?" inquired the king.

"Sire, if your majesty will graciously afford me a little aid, that prejudice shall be removed," replied Parmentier.

"To overcome prejudice is a difficult matter; but how can I aid you, M. Parmentier?"

"If your majesty will graciously order that a soldier shall mount guard in my potato field at Montreuil, potatoes shall be all the fashion in less than six months."

The king laughed, and granted Parmentier's request. Thenceforward a military guard might be seen promenading with measured step the naturalist's potato-field. How precious must that blue-flowered plant be! thought the lookers-on. No more fear of leprosy—no more dread of poisoning. The highest people in France were proud to eat potatoes. In 1785 the harvest failed, the corn crop scarcely amounting to one-half the usual yield. Then popular indifference with respect to potato culture completely disappeared, and the rapidity with which its propogation was conducted may be estimated by the fact that in the year 1793 forty thousand acres of land were under potato culture in France. In 1815 there were about eight hundred and seventy-five thousand seven hundred and sixty acres thus devoted.

PRONOUNCING WELSH WORDS.

Now, one of the great beauties of the Welsh tongue, says Cassell's Magaline, is the consistent method of pronouncing it. Here are two capital rules which will enable any one who has mastered the alphabet (as we have already done) to venture with confidence upon any Welsh word. First, let it be remembered no letter is ever mute. That is a great point gained, for if we glance at a few English words, in which a good many superfluous letters are sure to exist, we shall the more readily appreciate the help to a beginner that such a rule must be. Secondly, the accent is always laid on the penultima, or last syllable but one. Here again the learner finds a valuable key to the proper pronunciation. In English—not to mention other languages—words of different meaning are often spelled alike (such as "produce," the verb, and "produce," the noun), and the usual means of distinguishing them to the ear is by a change of accentuation, and to the eye solely by the context. But in Welsh this is not necessary. The accent is uniformly placed, and the changes in the meaning are more logically effected by mutations in the words themselves.

CRUEL SPORT.

The arrival of a new cash-boy in a Syracuse dry-goods shop, not long since, suggested to a number of his mischievous fellows the propriety of subjecting him to an initiation. Having taken him into the basement and tumbled him about after the most approved undergraduate method, it was proposed that he should be hanged. A piece of cord, fastened overhead, was accordingly slipped around his neck and a box on which he had been standing was removed from under him. There he dangled until his face was black and his tongue protruded. At the latter manifestation they became alarmed and endeavored to release their victim, but there was some delay in getting a knife, and when at last he was cut down he was almost insensible. The young executioners were immediately discharged.

A WONDERFUL CLOCK.

A clock has been erected at Brussels, which is intended to run forever—or rather until the machinery wears out. No principle of self-creating power is involved in its construction. It is run by ordinary weights, but one of nature's forces is kept at work winding them up. By means of a fan set in a chimney and operated by the draught of air the clock is wound, and when the weights are at their full height an automatic brake is put in operation which checks the action of the fan. The clock in Brussels has been running since September, 1881, and has kept good time.

To be faithful without loving is to have the patriotism of virtue.

The most manifest sign of wisdom is continued cheerfulness.

The NEW YORK, 1883. Sun.

More people have read THE SUN during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read and like THE SUN for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at pr sent revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs THE SUN makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whale as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The SUN has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the SUN is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

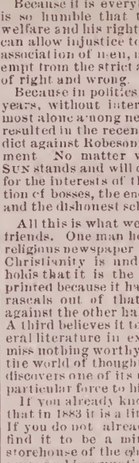
Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robesonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the SUN stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the SUN is the best religious newspaper ever published, because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor.—A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the SUN discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the SUN, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before.—If you do not already know the SUN, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of commonsense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government, a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

Terms to Mail Subscribers.

The several editions of THE SUN are sent by mail, postpaid, as follows:



DAILY—55 cents a month, $6.50 a year; with Sunday edition, $7.70.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—$1 year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues; an Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, market reports, and literary, scientific and domestic intelligence make THE WEEKLY SUN the newspaper for the farmer's household. To clubs of ten with $10, an extra copy free. Address

COMPOUND PEPSIN TONIC

Compound essence of pepsin. A remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion as shown in loss of appetite, nausea, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, water-brash, and a sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach. Dose, one tablespoonful (for adults) before meals.

Dyspepsia or indigestion is very prevalent in this country owing to habits of living—especially of eating and drinking. There is a disagreeable sensation in the stomach, although there may be no pain. When there is pain it is located in the breast, giving rise to fears of lung disease. There is a slight nausea; the mouth is clammy, or has a sour, bitter taste; the complexion is sallow, the bowels are costive, and there may be heartburn, water brash, flatulence, palpitation of the heart (causing fear of heart disease), headache or double sight. The disease may be caused by either too much or too little exercise, too severe application of the mind, excessive emotion, intemperance in alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea or coffee, too warm and too rich food, ice water, excessive use of medicine, etc. For sale by

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings, Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I rebeived decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it."

J. E. Brierton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March 1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency, in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE

Mock Trial.

I have no doubt that many of your readers will remember the famous mock trial, Carey vs. Whitefoot. The court was held in the chamber of a building, afterwards occupied by Rufus Choate as a law office for a short time. Now as to the cause. The boys in the paint shop of J. W. Carey had just painted a sleigh, and the brush had hardly ceased its labors, when Whitefoot entered the shop, and the young men after much persuasion succeeded in getting Whitefoot to take a seat in the sleigh to see if it was all right, telling him they should rely upon his judgment more than any one. He accordingly took his seat where the paint had just been put on, and the seat of his pants did not look quite as well as before he went in. Here was trouble: his pants were of a light grey color originally, but their seat now was a deep red; how to get out of the dilemma he knew not. While the discussion was going on Carey entered the shop, and after ascertaining what had happened, thinking to have some fun, charged Whitefoot with stealing his paint and damaging his sleigh, but told him if he would sit on the seat again and leave what paint he had taken on his pants, it would be all right. Accordingly Whitefoot entered the sleigh and tried to scrape off the paint from his pants, but unluckily he did not sit in the same place as formerly, and of course his clothes did not gain any by the experiment, and seemed to give Carey greater cause for complaint. Carey pretended to be greatly offended, for Whitefoot had appropriated still more of his property by the action.

Some of the neighbors to turn the affair to a good account had an interview with Whitefoot, and placing before him the grave charges against him, advised preferring counter charges against Carey, but they could not think of anything of importance, save breaking the peace of the neighborhood by calling him bad names, which they told him was equivalent to assault, and if it was proved would probably send him (Carey) to the State House. It was decided after consultation to hold court and try to settle the matter. The court organized with Jonathan Shove as judge, Ward Poole, Jr., as counsel for Whitefoot and Fitch Poole as clerk. Carey thought his side was so clear, as he could point to the clothes of Whitefoot as proof of guilt, that he did not need counsel. Mr. Poole had an array of books which if they were not law, were in some parts gospel. There was the History of England in the sixteenth century, Fox's book of Martyrs, Pilgrim's Progress, and that the pronunciation should be correct, Johnson & Todd's Dictionary. The court held its session in the evening so that every one could attend as the case was of importance. On the evening which the trial commenced, according to the New England custom, the Judge was escorted to the court room by the Bailiff armed with his badge of office, a long pole from the upper end of which floated long ribbons of red, white and blue, and with all the dignity pertaining to the office.

The court was opened by a call from the powerful lungs of Benjamin Lang, Esq. The Judge remarked that he hoped the testimony to be taken would be received in a calm and dispassionate manner and that no merriment would be allowed to disturb the court. He alluded to the testimony as it would probably be conflicting and he thought it the mightiest case that ever came up those stairs. He said the issues were so blended together that the verdict of one would be the verdict of the other. The first called to the stand was Proctor Perley. The question of taking the oath was waived because the witness said it affected his nerves to take an oath, and in answer to the question whether he did not think that Carey had broken the peace, replied that he did not think he had, for he had not known of any peace in this place. He, the counsel, then wished him to state what was probably the effect the occurrence in the sleigh had on the paint shop, and he answered that it probably drained off the supply of red paint, as the pants of Whitefoot would testify. The question was then asked in what situation the sleigh was in previous to its being entered. In reply he said, it was in the southeast corner; it stood on its runners and its back sloped about two and a half inches from the perpendicular. The counsel then cited the case of Bishop Cramm, showing a parallel case of suffering to which Whitefoot had been subjected. The next witness was I. Nutting. The clerk would have administered the oath but the witness talked so fast that it had to be abandoned. He was asked whether he did not think Whitefoot an upright man. Replied that he thought he was as far up as he could see. In relation to Carey's breaking the peace, he thought he had, for he could not sleep in church as he (Carey) kept up such a confounded scraping on that big fiddle of his. Robert Trofatter was called. He did not approve of taking an oath as he had followed the injunction to the letter of "swear not at all." He was asked in regard to the intellectual character of Whitefoot, whether he thought he had not forgotten a good deal; answered that he might have forgotten me, but he guessed he had no more to forget. The counsel thought that the testimony was so direct as to the guilt of Carey, that the cases would be rested here. Just at this stage of proceedings the crowd opened the way and Whitefoot's smaller but more courageous half, marched into the court room armed with a broom stick, and marched her husband to his home in double quick time. The boys heard of her coming, had planted a large blunderbus in the street loaded to the brim, and just as the pair issued from the entry it went off equal to a six pounder and thus ended the trial, which could not declare a verdict upon either.

J. G. PHELPS.

The Shoe & Leather Reporter says that in Massachusetts there are 1,250 boot and shoe manufacturers throughout the State. Of tanners and curriers 667, of which number Salem and Peabody have 132 who finish upper and morocco stock, and Woburn and Winchester have 28 who finish upper, grain and buff splits. Lynn leads the entire Union in the number of shoe manufacturers and value of goods made for the trade. In morocco manufacture she comes next to Philadelphia.

Will some one tell us what constitutes the Evangelical Alliance in this country? Who is he? By what right does he, or it, select the topics for the Week of Prayer? Are the topics made up abroad, and by whom? and adapted here to the American market, and by whom? Do more than one man, or three men, at the most, conduct the business—we had almost said the fussiness—of this organization?—N. Y. Independent.

The state supreme court has decided that liquor dealers cannot evade the law which prohibits the sale of liquor upon premises within 400 feet of a school house. The effect of this decision will be to deprive about 150 dealers in Boston from carrying on their business in their present locations. The latter had thought to avoid any interference, by boarding up the principal entrance on the street near a school-house, and making new entrances from other streets.

GREAT
MARK-DOWN.

We offer to make to order our overcoating and heavy weight suitings at cost. This will save you from $3 to $6 on an overcoat or a suit. We do this to run off some of our heavy weights and make room for spring and summer goods which we have already purchased. Parties who have been trading with us will remember that our goods are all plainly marked, so that there is no sham about this. We shall quote prices from $3 to $6 less than the original prices.

WILMOT'S

NEW YEAR'S GREETING OF 1883.

BROKEN LOTS.

At this time of the year, after the regular season's trade is over we have a large number of Overcoats, Suits and Pantaloons left, which are in broken lots and which we shall sell in many cases at less than the actual cost of the fabric from which they are manufactured. The reason of our selling these goods at such ridiculously low prices is because the sizes are not complete and consequently ought not to be carried over to next season.

In order to close these goods we have marked them at prices that will sell them, to the last garment.

REMEMBER! We may not be able to fit all, but those of you who can get fitted will get wonderful bargains. If you don't wish them for this winter, buy them for next. It will pay you.

We have not space to enumerate the articles, styles or prices, but ask you to come and see for yourself, and we are sure you will be repaid for your time and trouble.

ALL of our departments are included in this sale; if you are in need of anything that we have in any of our departments, be sure and give us a call.

N. B. Would call your special attention to a bargain lot of Winter driving vests, made from heavy winter overcoatings which we shall offer, to close, at $1.50, 2.00, 2.50 and $3.00.

OUR DEPARTMENTS.

Men's ready-made, Hats and Caps.

Boys' ready-made, Furnishing Goods,

and Merchant Tailoring.

Dramatic and Musical.

The Unitarian Chapel was crowded in every part on Thursday evening, when the Unity Club gave a dramatic entertainment. They first gave the comedy of "Doing for the best," in two acts. The two leading parts were taken by Horace G. Wheeler and Mrs. F. C. Ferguson, and they were acted with a spirit and comprehension which not only showed much study but rare dramatic ability on their part. The other parts were taken by Dr. Weston, Dr. Gray, Mr. Wells, Mr. G. Fred Osgood and Misses Nellie Merrill and L. Maria Winchester. When all did so well it would be superfluous to particularize. The entire comedy moved with a smoothness and precision which could successfully be imitated by companies of much more experience. The amusing farce of "Popping the Question" followed. Dr. A. M. Dudley, who had been cast to Mr. Primrose, was unavoidably called to New York, and his part was read by Fred Osgood, but in such a manner that the farce was thoroughly enjoyed by all. Mrs. Ferguson and Miss Winchester, as the two old maids, were well disguised and provoked roars of laughter. During the evening excellent selections of music were given on the piano by Mrs. Dr. Gray. The entertainment must have netted a neat sum to the organ fund. We have heard a desire expressed on the part of many for a repetition of the performance, and we are happy to announce that such is the intention of the Club, at an early day.

Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels appear this week at the Boston Theatre, and judging from the hearty welcome which has everywhere greeted them, the spacious auditorium of this theatre will be packed. Next week Mary Anderson comes in fulfillment of her annual engagement. She will appear in her favorite characters, and will be supported by J. B. Studley, R. L. Downing and a special company.

At the Globe Theatre the Hanlon Brothers repeat their performances in the sprightly comedy "Voyage de Suisse." Fun abounds wherever the Hanlon are, and it is not surprising that the attendance is large.

Margaret Mather, J. M. Hill's new star, comes to the Park this week. Great things have been said of this actress. She has had remarkable success elsewhere, crowded houses greeting her at every performance. This week she appears in Romeo and Juliet, supported by young Salvini and Milnes Levick. Miss Mather's first professional appearance was in Chicago, five months since, and this is her first appearance on the Boston stage. She will play two weeks at the Park—appearing next week in "Leah the Forsaken," as Rosalind in "As You Like It" and Pauline in "Lady of Lyons."

The Bijou Theatre will play Iolanthe to the close of the season from all present indications. Its success is phenomenal. People who go once go again and many times. The ushers to the theatre are dressed in Turkish cotumes and are unusually courteous and polite, as in fact are all the attaches.

At the testimonial to John McCullough at the Boston Theatre Friday night, it is said there was the largest house ever known—standing room being at a premium.

Our readers must not forget the play of the "German Volunteer," at Mechanic Hall to-night and to-morrow night for the last times. Miss Ada M. Hill of this town appears in the support, and the attendance has been large on each evening.

Friday evening we are to have Carrie Swain in her new play. Those who saw her in "Cad, the Tom-boy" will want to see her in this. Since she appeared in Salem, some weeks ago, she has been playing to large and enthusiastic audiences, and her abilities certainly promise to put her in the front rank in her profession.

It should be borne in mind that Salem and vicinity are to be especially favored next Monday evening, in that John McCullough, fresh from his laurels at the Boston Theatre, is to appear for one evening. The company to support him will be the same as at Boston, and there is every reason to believe that Mechanic Hall will have an audience such as is rarely seen. It is years since Mr. McCullough played on the New England circuit. It is only by special desire that he attempts it. The play will be "Virginius," one of the best in his repertoire. Secure your seats early. For sale at Ropes'.

Little Corinne and her famous Merrie Makers, in their new play of Bijou, or our company, at the Institute last Friday evening, were greeted with a good house, such as they deserved. We need not speak of this wonderful little actress who has provoked wonders that a mere child was capable of understanding and delineating characters that would seem to task the ablest elocutionists, and whose singing is always encored. The whole company was good and those who did not see them last week have an opportunity offered again next Friday evening.

Aldrich and Parsloe in the popular play of "My Partner," had a good house last Friday evening. The play has lost nothing in its numerous performances, and the support was capital throughout.

Mrs. Thomas Barry, Wm. Redmund and the regular Boston Theatre Company will appear in the performance of the "White Slave" in Salem, Feb. 16.

The Salem Oratorio Society had a fine rehearsal of the "Redemption" on Thursday evening last which was well attended. We heartily wish that our citizens could hear this masterpiece of Gounod. Quite a number of persons have requested the society to give a performance of the work, especially as the Lowell Society have agreed to unite with them should a concert be given here. Both societies are to render the oratorio in Lowell the last of March, and it seems as though Salem ought to have sufficient enthusiasm over a work which has been received elsewhere with more than ordinary admiration, to secure a performance of it here. Already some have volunteered to aid in indemnifying the Society against loss in giving this Oratorio and the question is who will follow their example.—Observer.

LENT.—1. All days of Lent, except Sundays, are fast days of obligation.

2. By dispensation from the Holy See, the use of flesh meat is allowed, once a day only on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays—the second and last Saturdays excepted. The use of meat on Sundays is not limited as to the number of times.

3. Beside lard, the fat rendered from any kind of meat may be used in preparing food on any day in Lent. This dispensation is also extended to the days of abstinence and fast days throughout the year.

4. At the evening collation, on account of long existing custom, the church tolerates the use of eggs, butter, cheese and milk.

5. The use of flesh meat and fish at the same meal is not allowed.

6. The following persons are exempted from the obligation of fasting: All under the age of 21 years and those of advanced age; the sick; those who cannot fast without grave injury to their health; women during pregnancy, or with nursing infants, and all those whose duties are of a very laborious or exhausting nature. Those who are excused from fasting are not thereby freed from the obligation of abstaining from flesh meat, except in cases of sickness and the like.

During the holy season of Lent, which begins, this year, on the 7th of February, it is the archbishop's desire that some special devotions such as the "Way of the Cross," or the "Rosary of the Blessed Virgin Mary," or "Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament," with an occasional sermon, should be provided for the faithful. Every means should be used to remind them that it is a time of penance and prayer that, unless the heart is free from sin, and the soul sanctified by the worthy reception of the sacraments, it will profit them little to keep Lent.

By order of the most reverend archbishop.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—Jan 27, Ellen O'Connell, assault, discharged.

Poet's Corner.

The New Soprano.

Hushed is the church in the cool and fragrant air of the morning;
Stilled is the rustle of silk, unmoving the delicate laces,
Save as a bride newly wed flutters in through the oaken door-way,
Steals softly up the broad aisle and crimson sits by her husband.

Reverent and silent below are faces in worship inclining,
Alight with the beauty of life or bright in the dawning of Heaven.
Down through the motionless air the twitter of birds in the belfry
Floats like a breathing of peace, then quivers away into silence.

Slowly uprising, the priest, aloft in a strong-held of walnut
(Quarried and shaped in the schools, with marks of their chisel upon him,)
Rustles the wide-spreading leaves and reads from the marvelous volume
Something of God's mighty love and fiery judgments impending.

Then falls the silence again; but soon through the low-sweeping arches
Murmurs a tremulous thought, a dream of the glory of Heaven,
Seeming an echo far borne from anthems of spirits rejoicing,
Praising the glory of God and the joy of earth's Sabbath returning.

Joyful the slumbering soul awakes at the sound from its dwelling;
Catches a hint of its home and soars to the gate way eternal;
Fade the imprisoning walls; fades earth, like a vision departing;
Glad rise the heavenly hills and near comes the chorus immortal.

Thronged are the murmuring groves, gleam fair the rivers unfailing;
Swells the glad chant of the choir, approaches the glory supernal;
Rises the dream-wafted soul and floats through the welcoming portals—
Falls, and awakes upon earth, for the song of the singer is ended.

Over the Album.

This one is John—that's Josie;
I think she's pretty—don't you?
The baby all so plump and rosy,
Is sister's youngest—little Sue.

Old bald-head! Why, you wretch, that's father
And here is Uncle Jonathan;
His ears are long? You needn't bother,
Your ears are too long—for a man!

The girl with lovely hair? That's Rena;
She isn't nice—that hair is red!
As pretty as a sweet verbena?
Oh, pshaw! Now, don't be foolish, Fred!

Who is that dried up looking creature?
Fred Smith, I think you are a brute!
You know it is I by every feature—
You know me by that summer suit!

Well then if you're repentant, sinner,
I'll pardon you—now please, please quit;
Miss Jones will notice us at dinner
And say, "They've had a kissin' fit."

(For the Press.)

To A Little Friend.

Herewith good wishes I doth extend,
And pray that th' angels guard my friend,
And guide thee through virtues' sure way,
From which may ne'er your footsteps stray.

As from a wee bud blooms the rose,
And unto all its sweets disclose,
So may thy rosy childhood bud
Into perfected womanhood.

Long be on earth, thy years of life,
All free from sorrow, care and strife;
Some noble deed mark each day spent,
Which bringeth peace and sweet content.

And when at last, God calleth thee,
Unto His home—Eternity,
May you be found worthy a place
Among the heavenly host to grace.

FRANCIS NUGENT.

Selected Story.

Saved From Dishonor.

Mrs. Harper was an old lady; her hair was white with the snows of many winters, and her blue eyes were dimmed by the sorrows of a long life. She was sad and solitary as she sat in her drawing-room, evidently expecting an arrival. The door opened, and a tall, handsome man entered the room.

John Harper glanced uneasily at his mother as he sank into a chair. Before she could speak, he exclaimed, 'Read me no lecture! I know that I came home last night and was rather merry; in fact, I was intoxicated: but, mother, remember I am no longer a boy. I am a man thirty years of age, and you cannot expect me to be responsible to you for my actions. I met some friends, and we had a champagne supper to celebrate my engagement to Leonora Markham, and perhaps we all drank more wine than was good for us.'

'My son,' was Mrs. Harper's reply, 'Leonora is refined and fastidious. Do you think she would be pleased if she heard how you commemorated the happy event of your bethrothal?'

John's face flushed as he listened; but with manlike obstinacy he would not acknowledge his error.

'When you told me of your engagement,' she continued, 'I was happy, for I thought you were worthy of possessing an innocent young wife. Prove yourselves so by promising me never again to taste intoxicating liquor.'

'Mother,' was the reply, 'I will not pledge myself to become a teetotaller, for I have too much self-respect to degenerate into a sot.'

'You have never known,' said Mrs. Harper, 'but one parent—your unhappy mother. The memory of the dead should be sacred; but, to save you, I will reveal your unfortunate father's sin.

My married life began under the most favorable circumstances; but one evening your father did not return at his usual hour. At last I heard footsteps. Presentiments of evil made my heart sink. I opened the door. To my horror, a drunken man staggered into the room.

I could not believe that contemptible being was my husband. He embraced me, and for the first time in my life I shrank from his caress. He clasped me in his arms, and kissed me with maudlin affection. I felt degraded by his love, and pushed him from me with disgust. My repulsion drove him frantic. I saw his arm uplifted. I felt a heavy blow, I realized that I was a drunkard's wife; and then I knew no more, for I became unconscious.

That morning you were born. For many weary weeks I lay struggling with death. I was delirious, and did not know that I was a mother. When I regained my senses, my first thought was of my unhappy husband. I glanced around the room, but I did not see the one I looked for; I only saw his heart-broken mother, who sat weeping by my bed-side.

She brought you to me, and folded my arms around your tiny form.

'My child,' she said, 'you have some one yet to live for. Watch over your boy—rear him to become an upright, honest man, and above all, teach him to shun the wine-cup, for that was his father's curse.'

'Oh, mother,' was my reply, 'I still love my husband, for he was never unkind to me until that fatal night; and then I am sure that he was irresponsible, for he was insane from drink. Call him to me, mother; I will forgive him all; I will reclaim him, and we will again be happy.'

I received no reply. I looked up, and then I noticed that my mother-in-law was dressed in deep mourning. I grasped her by the arm. I implored her to tell me what had happened.

Then I learned that your unfortunate father was dead. After weeks of dissipation, he had died miserably from the effects of drink.

After hearing the sad history of my life, I am sure that you will listen to your mother's warning. Promise me, I implore you, never to taste wine again.'

The old lady's voice trembled as she spoke, and her mild blue eyes filled with tears.

'Mother,' was the reply, 'I answer you as I did before; I have too much self-respect ever to become a drunkard. You must trust your boy. I do not inherit that fatal appetite of my father; I will prove myself worthy of your affection.'

Leonora Markham was the petted child of fortune; she had been left motherless at an early age, and her father devoted his life to his child, indulging her in every wish. The course of true love had in this instance run smoothly. Leonora was affianced to the man of her choice; yet she looked most unhappy on one fair day, and her friend Minnie's conversation did not enliven her.

'If I were you,' she exclaimed, 'I would not marry John Harper. I am sure that he is dissipated. Last night he gave a champagne supper, and my brother George told me that John went home quite intoxicated. I suppose you have heard that his father died of delirium tremens, and I am sure that his son inherits his failing.'

Leonora was but seventeen; yet although so young she loved with all a woman's strength, and she would not hear her absent lover condemned.

'It is despicable,' she exclaimed, 'to traduce one who is not present to defend himself! But it is base to malign the dead!'

'Excuse me,' was Minnie's farewell speech, 'but I think it only friendly to warn you before it is too late. Do not risk becoming a drunkard's wife.'

Leonora shuddered as she listened, for she loved with such devotion that she was resolved to marry John Harper.

A gentle tap on the door interrupted her reverie, and Mrs. Harper stood by her side.

'I have a sad duty to perform,' she exclaimed. 'You can imagine how humiliating it is to me to condemn my own child; but I cannot allow you to marry my son without informing you—'

'Speak no more!' exclaimed Leonora. 'I know all! The censorious world would not allow me to remain in ignorance of the fault of the man I love! But yet I will become his wife! I will reclaim him and save him from his father's fate.'

As Leonora ceased speaking, John entered the room; he had heard her last words.

'I knew,' he exclaimed, 'that my darling would trust me; and she shall never have cause to regret her devotion.'

* * * * * *

A few years passed. Leonora married John Harper, and as yet had had no cause to regret her choice.

One fair evening she awaited her husband's arrival home. A beautiful child sat by her side; her long, golden curls reached to her waist, and her dark brown eyes beamed with intelligence.

'Mamma,' she exclaimed, 'will papa soon come home? Oh, there he is!' she cried, as she heard a footstep.

In a moment she was at the door, and soon returned with her father.

Leonora glanced at her husband, but he could not meet the calm, truthful eyes of his wife.

The mother silently led her little child from the room. She soon returned; but the happy light had faded from her face.

'John,' she said, 'your mother called me your guardian angel, for she said I had saved you from sin. She died happy; her last words were, 'Thank Heaven that my boy is not a drunkard!' We have been married for five years, and to-day, for the first time in my life, I blush to acknowledge you as my husband. Your eyes shine with an unnatural lustre, and your cheek is flushed from the effects of drink.'

'Leonora, forgive me! Trouble has caused me to forget my promise. I am a ruined man! When I settle with my creditors, I shall be penniless.'

'Do not give way to despair,' was the response. 'I am rich in my own right; I was an only child, and my father left me all his wealth. Everything I possess is yours.'

'Oh, no!' was the hasty reply. 'I will never touch a penny of your fortune; for I know a woman's nature, and I am sure that you would lose all respect for me if I were to become a dependent upon your bounty. I must arouse myself, and begin the world again.'

'But is it manly,' she asked, 'to seek consolation from the wine-cup? Do not confuse your brain with drink when you require a clear mind, so that you can have strength to meet your troubles and overcome them. You tell me,' she continued, 'that you would feel humiliated if you were to accept pecuniary aid from your wife; but are you not more degraded when you compel me to teach our child to shun her father? This evening Blanche said, 'What is the matter with papa?' I told her that you were ill; she asked to come to you, but I had to refuse her request. My darling is too pure and innocent to be contaminated by a drunken father's caress. Oh, John,' exclaimed Leonora, 'for the sake of our child be true to your promise and resist temptation!'

'In future,' was the reply, 'you will have no occasion to teach my child to avoid me. To-morrow I leave the city; business calls me away.'

Weeks passed. Leonora had not heard from her husband: she knew that his affection for her was sincere, and he would not have neglected her if he were not demoralized by dissipation.

One evening she sat alone in her desolate home, almost heart-broken. Consolation she had none; she had no confidant, for she was too true a woman to disclose her husband's foibles to the world.

Her sad thoughts were interrupted by a knock at the door. A gentleman entered the room. He asked Leonora if she were the wife of John Harper.

'Excuse me, madam,' he continued, 'but no doubt you have heard my name—F. M. Black—mentioned by your husband. A few weeks ago he left for St. Louis; while there he had opportunities of disposing of diamonds. I possessed one worth a thousand pounds. I gave it to him, and he promised that I should hear from him in a week or two; if he was unsuccessful in selling the gem, I should have it again by that time. Many weeks have elapsed, but I have received no communication from Mr. Harper. I do not doubt his honesty, but I am afraid that he is incompetent, through illness, to transact business. As you are his wife, no doubt you can give me some information regarding him.'

Leonora's pale cheek became ghastly as she listened. Had drink so degraded John Harper that he had become a thief?

For a moment she was overwhelmed with this new sorrow; but she soon recovered her self-possession. She was a true wife. The world should never know of her husband's dishonor.

'You will excuse my agitation,' she said, 'when I inform you that you are correct in your conjectures respecting Mr. Harper. He has been very ill for many weeks; to-day I received a letter from him. Unfortunately, illness has impaired his memory, for he informed me that he had lost your address, and was unable to remember where to send you the proceeds of the sale of the gem. To-morrow you will receive a check for the amount.'

A few more dreary weeks passed, and brought Leonora new trouble. Little Blanche was very ill. A few more hours would decide if she lived or died. The little form tossed restlessly. Time passed. The poor mother's suspense became unendurable. Her head fell on the pillow of her child. Misery had rendered her unconscious.

She revived to hear a well-known voice exclaiming, 'Oh, that I could sacrifice my worthless life to save my innocent child!'

The husband and wife had met once more.

'I have come,' said John Harper, 'to bid farewell to you and little Blanche before I leave my native land. I can never expect your forgiveness. But be merciful, and allow me to share your vigil. If our child recovers, you can enjoy all her love. Tell her that her father is dead; but be noble, and teach her to respect my memory.'

The sorrow-stricken man bowed his head in despair. A little hand was laid in his, and a gentle voice exclaimed, 'Do not leave me, my husband, but let us try to save our child.'

The astonished man sank on his knees and exclaimed, 'from this hour I will never taste liquor! Sooner will I drink poison, for that would cause less misery. I am ashamed to look an honest man in the face. I was entrusted with a valuable diamond. In my drunken stupor I lost the gem, and shall be branded as a thief.'

'Not so, my husband,' cried Leonora, 'for to shield you I paid the value of the gem, and your honor is safe.'

Day dawned. A feeble voice exclaimed, 'Papa, kiss little Blanche!'

The child lived; and John Harper's vow was never broken.

Leonora reaped the reward of her devotion by a long life of happiness and love. The wife's mission was fulfilled.

There has been less criticism of Gov. Butler's suggestions in regard to the state militia than of most other points, and it is here that his experience during the war renders him a respectable authority. If in time of peace we would prepare for war, it must be mainly through the efficiency of the militia of the various states, and not through a standing army, and as Gov. Butler suggests we should avoid the model of organization and peculiar discipline and methods of the regular army. A standing army is ever a standing menace to the liberties of the people, an ever ready tool to the concentration of power and the advancement of the interests of ambitious tyrants. It also saps the vitality of a nation by withdrawing the physically best men from the producing class, and establishing a class of virtual paupers, to be supported by the taxation of the laboring man. There has been much cause of alarm at the overgrowth of our regular army during the past few years, and the facility with which it can be called into service to suppress trifling local disorders in the several states, which should have been controlled by the militia, and thus avoid giving the standing army a too frequent excuse for interfering in local matters. But according to the report of the Secretary of War, the militia of the United States is in a very low and inefficient state. Only three states have as many as nine thousand enrolled men, while of thirty-one states not one has over three thousand. The good old plan in Massachusetts of enrolling every person between eighteen and forty-five, and obliging them to "train" two or three times a year, would be an improvement on this. We probably have at present as good a system, at least, as any state of the Union, though as the Governor intimates there is room for improvement.

Book Notices.

The Art Amateur for February contains some striking crayon and charcoal drawings and a very life-like figure study by Geo. H. Boughton, whose beautiful painting, "Flowers and Fading Leaves," is handsomely reproduced. The illustrations numerous and extremely interesting. Capital designs of narcissus, clover and barberries for jug and vase decoration, and a clever honey-suckle design for a screen are given, besides a variety of suggestions for general decoration and ecclesiastical embroidery. The text of the number is especially strong. New houses of artistic pretensions in New York and elsewhere are keenly criticised. There are valuable articles on fan painting and china painting and needle-work, and various topics relating to bric-a-brac, and art in dress are agreeably discussed. Price, 35 cents: $4 a year. Montague Marks, publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

WASHINGTON IRVING'S "CRAYON PAPERS."—This very Prince in the realm of letters is at last able to enter the homes of ordinary mortals. Until lately his imimitable productions have been practically inaccessible on account of their high cost. The recent expiration of copyright has freed them from the short-sighted monopoly which has preferred to harvest the dollars of the thousands rather than the dimes of the millions of his countrymen who take delight in his memory. The very beautiful Elzevir edition of his "Crayon Papers," with a brilliant sketch of the Life of Henry Irving by the poet, R. H. Stoddard, making a volume of over 350 pages, is just issued and the publisher with a view to securing promptly the immense sale that is necessary to make the low price possible, offers to send, a specimen copy in neat cloth binding to any address, for the nominal price of 35 cents, or in half Russia binding for 45 cents. Irving's complete Works are offered for prices ranging from less than $6.00 upwards. The cheapest edition until recently cost over $30.00. The publisher will send specimen pages free to any one upon request. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 18 Vesey Street, New York.

CHOICE LITERATURE.—This is the title of a monthly magazine of a character somewhat similar to the well-known Eclectic and Littell's Living Age, only at a reduction of cost so startling as to make one marvel—only 25 cents a year, though each number contains nearly one-half as much as one of the four-dollar magazines. The January number contains articles by Prof. Proctor, Samuel Smiles, Count De Falbe, the Bishop of Carlisle and Vernon Lee. Specimen copy sent free on request. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 18 Vesey Street, New York.

Peterson's Magazine for February is a beautiful number. The principal steel-plate Going to School is especially cunning; and the Two Little Pussies printed on tint, is only less so. Then there are four colored designs in embroidery for D'Oyleys and double size colored steel fashion-plates; a beautifully illustrated story; and about fifty other embellishments. The price of this magazine is but two dollars a year. Address, Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

THE LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEER.

I came into the city in a late train last night, and the engineer attracted my attention. He was so big and jolly and so black and greasy. Nothing in the world seems to worry him, least of all any danger or accident. There was no baggage car on the train, and I watched him through the front window of the smoker. He sat on an elevated seat on one side of his cab, contentedly smoking his wooden pipe and watching the track. There is one of the queer lives. This man, as I learned from one of the brakemen, lives in Philadelphia. He sleeps there all day, brings his train on to New York in the evening, goes back to Philadelphia, and between four and nine in the morning makes a short run up to Trenton and back. Then he has all the rest of the day for sleep. He reaches New York at ten in the evening, and does not leave till midnight, so that gives him two hours to get his supper—no, not his supper, his dinner, for the only meal he has before this is at six in the evening, when he gets up. It is dark now at six, remember, and it is hardly more than light when he turns in again, so he barely gets a glimpse of daylight. What a queer sort of life that must be, when you stop to think about it. Asleep all day, and all night sitting over the top of an immense boiler, flying across the country. Hardly a sight of his family, hardly a chance to know whether he lives in a red brick house or a white board house, or a French flat, if they had any such thing in Philadelphia. He is always in some danger, as we look at it, but he does not mind. Not because locomotive engineers are braver than other people, but because they are used to the constant danger and do not think of it. New Yorkers think nothing of riding on the Elevated roads, while people from other cities are generally afraid of them. This is not because the New Yorkers are braver, but because they are used to it. This engineer of mine is only a sample of some thousands more, who are flying about all night, never in bed except by daylight, always watching the track ahead, and keeping a close eye on steam gauges and water gauges. They cannot go at the business too young, for the company must have mature men, and they cannot stay in it till too old, for the companies must have men in their prime. So with hard work, constant danger, never-ending responsibility and the certainty of soon being displaced by a younger man, these engineers ought to get pretty good pay, one would think—about $100 a week, perhaps, to give him a chance to save up something for his wife and babies. But when one of them makes three or four dollars a day he considers himself well off. And he goes on through all his working life, carrying his dinner along in a tin pail, wearing greasy, slouchy clothes, and running a big risk of breaking his neck. Miserable sort of existence, you say? But then, look how fat and jolly he is with it all, and see how lean and doleful you and I are, who think ourselves much better off. Why, I would give $5,000 a year to have that engineer's chest and arms.—Redpath's Weekly.

THE STING OF THE BEE.

If we press the abdomen of a bee or wasp, so as to cause the sting to protrude we should naturally think that the sharp, dark-colored instrument was the sting itself. This, however, is not the case. The real sting is a very slender instrument, nearly transparent, keenly pointed, and armed on one edge with a row of barbs. So exactly does the sting resemble the many barbed arrows of certain savage tribes that, if the savages had possessed microscopes, we should certainly have thought that they borrowed the idea of the barb from the insect. What we see with the unaided eye is simply the sheath of the sting. Many savages poison their spears and arrows, and here also they have been anticipated by the insect. But the sting is infinitely superior to the arrow poison. No poison that has yet been made, not even the terrible wourali, or curare, as it is sometimes called, can retain its strength after long exposure to the air. The upas poison of Borneo, for example, loses its potency in two or three hours. But the venom of the sting is never exposed to the air at all. It is secreted by two long thread-like glands, not nearly so thick as a human hair, and is then received into a little bag at the base of the string. When the insect uses its weapon it contracts the abdomen, thereby forcing the sting out and compressing the venom-bag. By the force of the stroke which drives the sting into the foe its base is pressed against the venom-bag and a small amount of poison driven into the wound. As a rule, if the bee or wasp be allowed to remain quiet, it will withdraw its sting, but as the pain causes a sudden jerk, the barbed weapon cannot be withdrawn, and the whole apparatus of sting, poison-bag and glands is torn out of the insect, thereby causing its death.—Good Words.

A WONDERFUL PIANIST.

A smooth talker went from house to house among wealthy people in Chicago, telling them that a Count Eugene Radelzkey, a wonderful pianist, but too aristocratic to perform before an ordinary audience, would give an entertainment on the condition that it should not be advertised in the newspapers, and that admission should only be granted to carefully chosen persons. In this way about five hundred tickets were sold at $1.50 each. Carriage after carriage rolled up to the hall on the night of the promised performance, but the doors were found locked, and the janitor said; "I don't know nothing about no concert." The gentlemanly agent has not since been seen in that city. About the same time a benevolent lady, well known to everybody, went about trying to take up a small collection to help a deserving family in distress, and she only got twenty-three cents.

Bad company is a bad thing for bad men.

Anecdotes.

JOKES AND SATIRE.

It is noticeable that the difference between the jokes and fun of the present day and those of our fathers' time, is that now they are based usually upon some whimsically absurd, but perfectly good-humored, view of an ordinary subject; while in old times the repartee of witticism had the sharp crack of a whip in it, and cut deeply, without regard to the feelings of the victim.

American women of society of the Revolutionary era, were noted for their brilliancy and sharpness of retort; but there was always necessary a butt for their wit, who we may be sure did not join in the homage of their powers. Col. Tarleton, for example, dancing on a waxed floor, fell headlong at the feet of his hostess, a Southern belle.

"Do not be chagrined, colonel," she said quickly, helping him to rise. "You are not the first Briton who has bitten the dust before a Yankee rebel."

"I hope smoking is not offensive to you," said a German baron to an American lady, lighting his pipe on the deck of a steamer.

"I really cannot tell," she said indifferently. "No gentleman has ever smoked before me."

A commander-in-chief of the army in his later years was less deferential in his manner than suited the idea of haughty Virginia belles.

"And how do you find yourself, Miss Cabell?" he said one evening, leaning familiarly on the back of her chair.

"But poorly, general," she replied. "Old age is creeping too close upon me."

Now, to our modern taste there is more sharpness than good breeding in this kind of retort. Nor is it so difficult to acquire a reputation as a sayer of sharp things as may be supposed, provided a woman sets herself to look out for the bizarre, unexpected side of every subject, and is reckless as to the amount of satire with which she flavors her jokes. It is the bitter flavor in a joke which will give it popularity.

Young girls who have a certain kind of cleverness, and little beauty, are often tempted to indulge in cutting sarcasm, to draw attention to themselves in society. But however much their audiences in balls and parties may applaud or appear amused, they may be assured that all women avoid the sarcastic wit when they would seek a friend, and men also, when they choose a woman as a wife. In neglected, solitary middle age they learn how dearly bought were their short triumphs.

A TERRIBLE FALL.

A marvelous escape from instant death occurred at the Windsor station of the Great Western railway, says a London newspaper. Jones, the foreman of the yard, and a porter named George Landen, were engaged between nine and ten o'clock in extinguishing the lamps of a train standing upon the lofty viaduct, when, just as they had finished their work, Jones, who had been shutting the windows of the rear carriage, saw Landen take his footing out of a compartment and immediately afterwards heard a cry for help. Running to the parapet on the north side of the viaduct the foreman discovered Landen, who had fallen over, hanging by his hands to the telegraph wires, which he had clutched in his descent. Seeing the perilous position of Landen, a rope was procured and an endeavor made to throw it round him, but without success, and the unfortunate man, who could hold on no longer, fell a distance of probably thirty or forty feet, on to the ground beneath, fortunately escaping a timber wagon near one of the arches, and dropping upon the soft earth. Landen was conveyed to the Windsor Royal Infirmary, but after a medical examination was able to proceed to his home, having apparently sustained no other injury than the concussion incidental to his terrible fall.

A TOUGH STORY.

A young French painter was, not long ago, showing a Shah of Persia his picture of Herodias bringing in the head of John the Baptist. The Shah asked him how many minutes were supposed to have passed since the head was cut off. "Two minutes," said the painter. The Shah then told him that the lips ought to be wide open and of ashy white. As the artist was unwilling to be convinced, the Shah clapped his hands and a slave appearing, drew his sword, and with one tremendous sweep, severed his head from his body. He then pulled out his watch, and two minutes after stooped down picked up the bleeding head, and, walking to the picture, held the real head by the side of the painted one, and said to the Frenchman: "Monsieur, you can see for yourself that the lips ought to be ashy white and wide apart, and you will learn to believe the Shah in future."

MALE CRANKS.

A very sensible writer says: "We have often noticed that the young man who shrieks most frequently and shrilly for an improvement in the character of our women, both mentally and physically, is usually a little half-crank, spindle-shanked and lantern-jawed cuss, weighing about one hundred pounds, who hasn't sense enough of his own to get off the track when the cars are coming. Let's have no more such nonsense. The girls and women of to-day are a great deal too good for the deserts of the average man. When you hear a man growling about the depreciation of the gentle sex, set him down as a nincompoop."

When you are looking at a picture, you give it the advantage of a good light. Be as courteous to your fellow-creatures as you are to a picture.

There are a great many men who never mind their own business.

The suggestion of certain prominent individuals as candidates for the presidency, and the attempt to give them a boom in that direction at this time is certainly premature, and does not augur well for success. Let Gov. Butler or Gov. Cleveland demonstrate their fitness by one year, at least, in administering the affairs of a state before their democratic admirers talk so confidently of elevating them to the head of the nation.—Lynn Union.

The children of Israel were once fed by manna sent from heaven. This was an undoubted case of "God-send." The amelioration of human ills and ailments has been often undertaken and as often failed. Ely's Cream Balm, however, "has been weighed in the balance and not found wanting." It is a sovereign, speedy, certain and pleasant cure for Catarrh and cold in the head. Thousands of persons have attested this fact. "Ely's Cream Balm is a God-send," writes Mrs. M. A. Jackson, of Portsmouth, N. H., on May 22d, 1882. "I had Catarrh for three years, had tried nearly all remedies but to no purpose. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed quite freely, and I thought the sores in it would never heal. Your Balm has cured me." This preparation is not a liquid or a snuff, and is easily applied. Can you, reader, afford to experiment with injurious irritants and injections when a pleasant cure is at hand?

"Pull down your umbrellas. You'll scare this engine off the line!" screamed the engineer on the Western North Carolina road to a crowd of country people who had gathered to see the first train come in. They were all lowered at once.

IMPORTANT PROCLAMATION.—The Hon. Peter Bowe is Sheriff of the City and County of New York. Recently, in conversation with one of our reporters, Mr. Bowe proclaimed the following fact: "I consider St. Jacobs Oil an excellent remedy, and one that ought certainly to find its way into every household. Mrs. Bowe always has a bottle of it there, and makes a family remedy of it."—New York Evening Telegram.

It is stated that the working men in a certain Massachusetts city annually expend enough money for strong drink to pay all the cost of schools for their children. Perhaps it is true. A glass of beer a day costs $18 a year, and there must be many who drink three or four glasses a day. Some of these cannot afford(?) to pay a two dollar poll-tax, and thereby have the satisfaction of contributing something to the expenses of government. Governor Butler wants them to vote, all the same, however. Butler, thy name is—well, not honesty.

If clergymen will become editors, they must expect to receive the usual treatment accorded to these useful men. The Rev. Dr. J. M. Reid, of the Methodist Missionary Society, tells this good story about himself: While he was engaged in editorial work, some time ago, he was invited to preach in Chicago. As he took a seat early, in a pew, to meditate on his sermon, he discovered that a prayer-meeting was going on in the adjacent room, and that he could over-hear what was said. Presently a loud and lusty brother engaged in prayer, and the bulk of the petition was for the preacher of the evening, who was listening. After touching on various matters, in which he thought the Lord needed information, he said: "O, Lord, bless him who is to speak to us this evening. He is a poor, weak man, but make him a power. Bless his message. We know that he is only an editor, and that he is rusty; but do, Lord, rub the rust off."

A thedispatch has been received by officials of the Norwich and Worcester Steamboat Company from the United States Supervising Inspector of Steamboats at Washington which states that, "After careful reinvestigation, and upon the appeal of Capt. Graves of the tug Lenox, into the collision between the Steamer City of Worcester and barge Saginaw I concur in the opinion already pronounced by the Local Inspectors, and do therefore pronounce Capt. W. D. Ward of the said steamer City of Worcester entirely free from blame in the matter."

IMPORTANT TOTHE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. AN INVESTMENT

THAT PAYS 20 PER CENT.

AND FOR

ONE OF THE NECESSITIES OF LIFE.

EVERY MAN AND BOY

who resides in the New England States requires an Overgarment. The Naumkeag Clothing Company having on the counters about (600) six hundred of these valuable garments WILL CLOSE OUT the lot at Retail for about ONE HALF their value. The garments are all cut, made and trimmed in the latest style and will be as fashionable for the Fall and Winter of 1883 as at the present time. Our reasons for closing out all our Overgarments at a large discount is, we require the room for Spring and Summer Clothing. With our enormous salesroom of nearly (7000) seven thousand square feet we find it inadequate to meet the demands of our increasing trade.

It has always been our custom after the busy season to give our customers a "benefit" by offering a Mark Down Sale of fine and medium Clothing, but the fine quality and low prices of our goods, at this sale will eclipse anything ever before offered by any establishment in New England.

This sale will not only include all our overcoats and ulsters, but a large lot of Men's, Young Men's, Boys' and Children's Suits, Pantaloons and Heavy Underwear.

Our Overcoats include the following styles, Cheviots, Elysian Beavers, Chinchillas, Moscon Beavers, Seal Brown, Black and Blue English and German Beavers, Seal Brown Kerseys, Plain and Fancy Mixed Cassimeres, Plain and Fancy Olive Greens and Oxford Mixtures.

We shall offer at this great sale three special bargains in Overcoats.

LOT NO. 1.

A large lot of Men's and Young Men's Plain and Fancy Mixed Cassimere, Melton Cheviot and fine Beaver Overcoats marked down from $20. and $22. to $15.

LOT NO. 2.

A lot of Men's extra fine English and German Beaver, Seal Brown Kersey, Olive Green and Brown Mixed Cassimere and Worsted Overcoats—some of them cut extra long—all marked down from $23. and $25. to a uniform price of $18 00.

LOT NO. 3.

A large lot of Men's and Young Men's Overcoats and Ulsterettes. This lot comprises thirteen different patterns—all handsome stylish garments—have been retailed all the season for $15.00, $16.50 and $18.00. We have consolidated the lots and marked them all at $10.00 each—a bargain unparalleled.

We have also a lot of Men's Overcoats, prices ranging from $2.00 to $8.00.

One lot of men's heavy fine all wool ulsters marked down from $25. and $22. to $15.00

One lot of 50 ulsters prices ranging from $4.50 to $10.00.

Boys' and Children's Clothing at a TREMENDOUS DISCOUNT.

Continuation of the great mark down sale of Heavy Underwear. Heavy Undershirts and Drawers 25c, 35c, 50c, and 75c and $1.00

Men's Cardigan Jackets marked down to 62c, 87c and $1.00—a great bargain.

Men's Unlaundered Shirts, linen bosoms, marked down to 38, 45, 69 and 92 cts. each, the greatest bargain ever offered in Unlaundered Shirts.

COMPOUND PEPSIN TONIC

Compound essence of pepsin. A remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion as shown in loss of appetite, nausea, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, water-brash, and a sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach, Dose, one tablespoonful (for adults) before meals.

Dyspepsia or indigestion is very prevalent in this country owing to habits of living—especially of eating and drinking. There is a disagreeable sensation in the stomach, although there may be no pain. When there is pain it is located in the breast, giving rise to fears of lung disease. There is a slight nausea; the mouth is clammy, or has a sour, bitter taste; the complexion is sallow, the bowels are costive, and there may be heartburn, water brash, flatulence, palpitation of the heart (causing fear of heart disease), headache or double sight. The disease may be caused by either too much or too little exercise, too severe application of the mind, excessive emotion, intemperance in alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea or coffee, too warm and too rich food, ice water, excessive use of medicine, etc. For sale by

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

THE RECENT decision of the United States Commissioner in Boston in regard to the faculty of the so-called Bellevue Medical College, gives the New York Nation an opportunity to make some plain statements in regard to the permission given by Massachusetts to the existence of such institutions—words which are not undeserved. It will be recalled that the college had been detected in the act of issuing a diploma to a student whose illiteracy was made patent to them; that facilities for obtaining a diploma were such that one could easily be obtained for the necessary cash, and little knowledge of the theory or practice of medicine. The fact also came out that whichever one of the officers received the money for such diplomas, made no return to the institution(?), but put it in his pocket. An arrest was made of the principals in this affair, for using the United States mail for the purpose of defrauding. The prisoners were discharged under the ruling that under the laws of Massachusetts there was nothing to prevent the founding of such schools and the issuance of such diplomas, in a word that the laws of Massachusetts sanctioned just such practice.

Now this is not a pleasant condition of affairs and surely needs the attention of our legislators. If a medical college can be founded by seven persons, a knowledge of the medical practice not even being requisite, and that institution can issue diplomas at pleasure in its corporate capacity, this state will be the stumping ground for frauds and deceivers not only in this but other professions. Massachusetts should make no restrictions as to the practice of her physicians—attempts in this direction have been vigorously resisted, and wisely so. It is not necessary to belong to this or that school of practice to be recognized as an honorable practitioner. They are even allowed to practice without a diploma. But this is usually known, and their status can be easily determined. But when persons can obtain a diploma of a college similar to the one under consideration, can compete with physicians who have spent years of toil and study to acquire a knowledge of their profession, while they themselves know less of the anatomy of the human frame, and of the treatment of disease than the ordinary horse doctor, it is time some oversight should be instituted by the State. Such a bogus diploma carries with it the presumed ability to practice in any state in the Union. It carries with it presumably, also, the sanction of the State, where it is issued. If such a diploma is not a reliable credential for the practice of medicine—as much so as if issued at Harvard or other well known medical institutions, some way should be devised for revoking them. Better still, they should not be allowed an existence. As the Nation puts it:—"When once formed in accordance with the statutes, these schools are, in effect, just as fully authorized as any regularly chartered medical college. Massachusetts allows them to exist, and she is responsible for their conduct. She is to-day, in effect, encouraging the manufacture of fraudulent diplomas by schools which have assumed, or may assume, the names of long-established schools of other States. To put it on no higher ground, Massachusetts should not thus violate the plainest rules of fairness and honor in trade by tacitly permitting such base and colorable imitations to be sold."

WHILE WE are of the opinion that the public institutions of Massachusetts will compare favorably with those of any other state in the Union, there are doubtless abuses in their management, and whether a reformation takes place through the influence of Gen. Butler or any other official is of little consequence. There is certainly need of reform in the manner of visiting these institutions. At present, the official visits are made at stated times, and known in advance to the officers of the different asylums. If there were anything to be covered up, it could easily be done. The patients and inmates are put on their good behavior. Weeks before the visit are spent in preparations for this, to them, great event. This should not be. The visit of those whose duty it is to inspect our public institutions should be unheralded and unannounced. There should be no time for the annual furbishing. They should be seen in their every day routine of duty, and if everything is conducted as it should be, such visits would be welcome to the officials; if otherwise, under the present system there is little likelihood of any abuses being discovered. From time to time, there are mutterings throughout different parts of the country, of the ill treatment of patients in insane asylums, and that sane persons are confined there. If such occurs in this State, it should be known, and our Commonwealth should be free from such disgrace. A reform in the method of visits would surely bring this about, and if such can be inaugurated by Gen. Butler he will deserve and obtain the thanks of the people.

IF ANY MOVEMENT is made towards a horse railroad to Danvers, as has been hinted by some of our cotemporaries, it should be done by the Naumkeag Street Railway. We think a horse railway to our neighboring town of Danvers would pay. There ought to be more intercourse between the people of these towns; and besides the social advantages which would accrue, there would be opened up a territory contiguous to each town, capable of a vast improvement. As we have previously suggested, the extension of the rails of the Naumkeag railway so as to reach the people of our town in the direction of Danvers, would be a movement which would be appreciated by our residents. Whether it be done by the direct line, or by the extension of the North Salem branch, as was suggested by a correspondent of the PRESS,—either plan would meet with a hearty approval. The directors of the Naumkeag Street Railway know best which would be most feasible.

There are some objections to the extension of the main line, such as the crossing of the rails of the Eastern and Lowell roads, but on the other hand, a step would be taken which would ultimately lead to the connection with Danversport, and then Danvers proper. That such a road would be as convenient and welcome to the residents of the scattered portions of our neighboring town, as to the residents of Andover street and vicinity here, goes without saying. We should be glad to see some movement looking toward such an extension, and we think the Naumkeag Street Railway are fully able and competent to meet all the demands in this direction.

THE LENTEN season begins to-day, and will have its due observance in the Catholic and English churches. Outside of the Catholic church, in Massachusetts, this season is very little observed; so little, that a visitor to New York State and its near vicinity, notably some portions of Connecticut, would be surprised at the difference. There the Protestant Episcopal Church is more numerous than here; in many places it is the leading church, and its observances give the custom to the entire community. The services of the Lenten season are largely attended; its fasts are observed; and abstinence from amusements and other pleasures rigidly followed. The fast of lent, followed by the Easter festival, is worthy of memorial, in that it turns the minds of the people, once a year, to the leading incidents in the life and death of the Saviour of the world. As the antipathy against the forms and customs of the English Church wears away, we anticipate that this season will be more and more honered by the Protestant Churches which now pay little if any regard to its observance.

IT IS EARLY for political booms in this state for the coming fall campaign, but the Sunday Globe had an article giving the authority of a prominent politician of North Eastern Massachusetts, that Dr. Loring was in training for the governorship. We have heard this hinted several times. But he would never run successfully against Gen. Butler, and the democrats will insist upon Butler's acceptance of a re-nomination, despite his assertions in his inaugural. The only man who can defeat Butler this fall is Lieut. Gov. Ames, and the Republican party will do a wise thing to nominate him.

Genuine Key West Cigars — try them — at George Stevens'.

WEST PEABODY.—The West Peabody Farmers' Club held its weekly meeting last Friday evening. The meeting opened with music. Subject, "The New England farmer and what shall he raise?" opened by J. F. Ingraham. Mr. Ingraham threw out some practical hints, saying "he thought a farm needed a good share of brains, and thought it was just the place to make them," but not feeling well would give way for some one else. Upon this, Rev. Willard Spalding took the floor and spoke very much against many crops that farmers raise. He said no farmer could afford to raise a root crop to feed out to his stock, nor can we afford to raise sheep, swine, or the ox, nor could we afford to keep oxen for the work they would do. He thought we could buy our horses much cheaper than we could raise, for we only stood one chance out of a thousand to get a good trotter. Indian corn was the crop he was in favor of; he said every farmer ought to raise his own corn and not buy a kernel, and by so doing keep more cows and use the whole thing on your farm, and by that you will enrich your farm so as to keep more cows, make your own butter and cheese, and only keep hogs enough to eat your skim milk. He was also down on poultry. Let them alone, he said, don't be bothered with them about your barn, for you can't afford to keep them. Corn is my crop, raise all you can of it from 5 to 20 acres, and keep cows enough to use the grain and stover, which, if well cured, was worth two-thirds as much as English hay for milch cows. Messrs. Walcott, Needham, Marsh, King, Skinner and Farwell, followed with interesting remarks. Mr. King was strongly in favor of the root crop for milch cows. Mr. Marsh thought if Mr. King would count the cost of raising, harvesting, carrying down cellar through a trap door and out the same way, carrying a long distance to the barn when cows are to be fed, the chopping, etc., it would be more economical to keep less cows, feed more grain and make more milk. Although the night was dark and slippery, large numbers were present including the ladies, whom we are always glad to see, many bringing their well trimmed lanterns with them and making quite a brilliant torch light procession as they are homeward bound. On the whole this was one of the best debates of the season. B. Viles, E. C. Farwell and B. H. Taylor were chosen to get up a musical entertainment for the benefit of the club. Meeting closed with a song from the Chorus Club, all speaking well of the progress and interest of our club.

Not long since, as Hayward Bros.' cattle were being driven from Brighton, two of them ran into Russell's woods, in this place, and as it was dark, the driver went on with the rest of the cattle to Mr. Hayward's, about a mile distant and got help and lanterns and went back to get the lost ones, but it was no use; they had taken on their wild western nature and could not be captured save by the bullet; this was Tuesday night. Wednesday morning, men with rifle in hand started for the hunt; there being snow on the ground they could track them, but could not get near enough for a shot, for when they heard footsteps they would run like deer. One of them was shot on Thursday, and the other Friday, the last one captured having six bullets in him; when dressed they were very fat, heavy cattle and would have been quite a loss to Hayward Brothers if they had not been captured before losing their flesh.

Mr. William P. Upham and family have moved to Salem for the winter, on account of a pressure of business in Salem for Mr. Upham.

Water is scarce and streams are low. Mr. Hackett has not water enough to do his grinding, consequently there has been no work in the saw mill.

Quite a lot of wood and lumber is being cut in this part of the town this winter, and the sound of the woodman's ax can be heard in every direction.

Mrs. Elizabeth Herrick is fast recovering from a shock of paralysis.

Look out for a jolly good time when the ladies of the West Peabody parish hold their fair and festival, for they always have a good time and a better time than ever may be expected this year, for many new things will be introduced of a pleasing nature. This will occur Feb. 21, of which public notice will be given. The object of this fair is to help pay the minister; a worthy cause and should be faithfully sustained.

Mr. Nathaniel Flint, one of our oldest citizens, is quite feeble; well known to most of our citizens as a market gardener.

As Mr. J. G. Walcott, Jr., was having some cows driven home, one of them slipped on the ice and so injured her that she had to be killed.

It is rumored by good authority, that business is to be again started where the old Brookdale factory was burned, some time since.

Mr. Joseph Henderson is not on his farm this winter, but is stopping in Salem through the cold weather.

Assemblies at West Peabody Hall once in two weeks, Tuesday nights, where they will have a good time, good order and good music.

Benj. P. Ware, of Marblehead, lectures before the Farmers' club next Friday night. V.

Last Thursday evening, John Linehan's barge conveyed a party of Peabody and Salem gentlemen to Lynn, their destination being the residence of Michael Griffen the handsome and popular organist of St. Joseph's (Catholic) church. Mr. Griffen was agreeably surprised when the party entered his home, his surprise being still further increased when Salem's well known druggist, Mr. J. J. Griffen, in a neat and appropriate speech, presented him in behalf of the assembled gentlemen, with a handsome easy chair. Mr. Griffen was deeply moved at this token of the affectionate esteem in which he was held by his friends, and happily replied in a few well chosen words. At bountiful and generous collation was then supplied, after which a general good time was enjoyed by all,—the night being pleasantly passed with music, singing, dancing, etc. The party returned home early Friday morning well pleased with the success of their enterprise, and the kindly manner in which they had been entertained. S.

The losses on the Tapleyville Fire have been settled by O. B. Chadwick & Co., as follows: Geo. B. Martin on building, total loss, $8000. Martin, Clapp & French, total loss on stock of $55,000 and $16,500 on machinery. Preston & Lynch receive $1000 on stock and $935.50 on machinery. N.P. Merriam receives $60 for damage to his stock and $190 on building. G. A. Tapley's losses on dwellings was divided among several Co's. The Fire Association of Philadelphia pays $800 total loss on one, and the Merrimac Mutual $100 partial loss on another. There were also two houses insured in the Holyoke belonging to him which were burned, the amount insured on which we were unable to obtain. The Lincoln Hall Co., get $30 and John Harwood $15.

At last a thoroughly safe attachment for a splitting machine has been invented, one that will render it impossible for a man to break his arm or injure himself in any way when caught by the roller. This invention is styled by the inventors "a patent Electrical Safety attachment for Splitting and other machines." The action of the splitting machine is made dependent on a current of electricity and the fact of a man's arm or other part of his body coming within a certain distance of the position required to break it breaks the circuit of electricity and the machine is instantly stopped. D. J. Mahoney and Starr C. Hewitt are inventors and owners of the Patent, and are prepared to guarantee it impossible for a man to get injured in a machine supplied with their attachment.

We regret to announce that Mr. Stephen F. Reed, while in the Exchange News Room last evening about five o'clock, was taken suddenly ill. He was kindly assisted to the office of Dr. Gray, just opposite, Mr. Reed lying down on the lounge, and every effort was used for his restoration. Not succeeding, Dr. Pike was hastily summoned and Mr. Reed was taken to his residence on Franklin street. This morning grave doubts were entertained by the physicians of his recovery, and he is still in a critical condition; but he had rallied somewhat this afternoon, a change which we hope may be for the better.

A family named Martin on Fulton street had a narrow escape from coal gas recently. A defect in the funnel of the stove allowed the gas to escape. The mother was awakened in the night by hearing the three children gasping for breath. In attempting to help them she became faint and unable to walk, but alarmed her husband who immediately started for the neighbors and upon his return found the cause of the trouble to be coal gas.

Last Saturday, a son of Sadie Ganley, fifteen months old, who lives in the rear of the Washington House, had his arm badly scalded. His mother left a pail of boiling water on the floor and the little one was at play near by. During the temporary absence of the mother he run one hand and arm into the water, burning it so that it peeled in places. Dr. Shanahan attended him.

At St. John's church last Sunday Father Masterson read the regulations for Lent, which are the same as those of previous years. The following are the devotions at St. John's church during Lent. Wednesday evenings at 7.30 o'clock there will be a sermon, followed by the Benediction of the Most Blessed Sacrament.

Friday evenings, at 7.30 o'clock the way of the Cross, followed by the Benediction of the most Blessed Sacrament.

The pay car of the Lowell railroad was in town to-day. The employes receive their pay the first Wednesday of each month.

Mr. Sargent, architect of the new town hall has recovered from his recent illness, and the work of piping the building by Mr. Thomas E. Wilson is progressing under his direction.

Almy, Bigelow & Webber are having a sale of black silks, and if any of our readers are in need of such an article and pass by the store of the firm they will make the mistake of a lifetime.

Mr. Geo. H. Carr announces to the public that Mr. H. C. Wilson is no longer in his employ. Old customers are invited to be particular about leaving their orders and see they are on his slate.

Mr. Chas. Flagg is canvassing this town for John H. Youngs' popular work called "Our Deportment." It consists of information on manners, conduct, dress, etc., besides giving letter forms, invitations, etc. It is published by the well known house of W. C. King & Co., of Springfield.

The agent for a "dime show" visited Peabody Monday looking for a place to locate. If it is no better than those that have visited our neighboring towns and cities, the character of it could be expressed in the single word "snide."

Last Sunday as one of our clergymen was looking over his sermon previous to ascending the pulpit, he discovered that several pages of the manuscript were missing. A messenger was dispatched to his home in haste and before he was fairly underway the missing pages were returned.

President Arthur had a narrow escape yesterday while attending a wedding. Owing to the crush of carriages in going to the church the pole of one of them got entangled in that in which the President was seated going through the carriage between himself and his daughter. The President walked home.

Bushby and Co., have a new advertisement in to-day's paper. They have just received a fine lot of Vermont butter, in small tubs for families who do not care to buy the large ones. They also advertise some Early Rose potatoes. Our readers do not need to be told that Bushby keeps only the best of goods, and the housewife who wants a pure article in the way of groceries will remember this reliable firm.

We commence to-day a series of articles, being the journal of J. G. Phelps, on a trip to California during the time of the gold fever to that place. Mr. Phelps then resided in this town, and is well remembered by our older citizens. The journal is interesting as showing in many ways the difference in modes of travel then and now, and as a description of the dangers and perils at that time among the pioneers to the "Land of Gold."

Mr. Frank Cousins will soon commence the work of enlarging his store; and, from the plans he has shown us, he will have a large, convenient, and very attractive establishment. One feature of it will be a bargain counter at the entrance; and this will be what its name purports—something that no one will be likely to pass over. There will also be three semi-circular counters, and a ladies' dressing-room up stairs for the benefit of the young ladies in his employ. The store will occupy the first floor of the entire building. To-day Mr. Cousins announces a great sale and many goods at low prices.—Salem Gazette.

F. W. Lucas & Co. call attention to their annual sale of shopworn goods at the store of the New England Boot and Shoe Co., in Salem. Mr. Lucas is determined to have a clean stock and fresh goods with the opening of the spring trade, and these goods will be sold at merely a nominal price. Read the advertisement.

Some genius has invented a machine to play pianos. This will fill a long felt want. When two young people of opposite sex are in the parlor in the evening the old lady don't begin to saunter in until the piano stops.—Philadelphia News.

A mark down sale at the NAUMKEAG CLOTHING CO., is always an event of importance to their customers, but the sale now in progress surpasses anything attempted by them. Their large stock of overcoats for men and boys, including the latest and best styles for the season, are to be sold out at great reduction to make room for the Spring trade. These overcoats will be perfectly suited to the fall of 1883, and there will be money saved by purchasing a garment at their present low rates.

Gov. Butler sent a message to the legislature yesterday calling attention to the danger to our harbor from sunken wrecks, and recommending that an appropriation be made and measures taken for their removal.

PETITION AND NOTICE.

Petition and Notice in relation to the location of a Horse Railroad from Lynn to Peabody.

TO THE BOARD OF SELECTMEN OF THE TOWN OF PEABODY:—Respectfully petition the undersigned, the Lynn and Boston Railroad Company, that they may be granted a location for track, within said Town, as follows; viz:

A single track with the necessary turnouts, switches and curves, commencing on Lynn Street at the line dividing said Town and the City of Lynn, thence over said Lynn Street to Washington Street; thence through said Washington Street to Main Street; thence on Main Street to Peabody Square.

And as in duty bound will ever pray, the Boston & Lynn Railroad Company,
By A. F. BREED, President.

Notice is hereby given to the abuttors on the streets named in the foregoing petition, and all others interested therein, that a meeting of the Selectmen of Peabody will be held at the Town House in said Town, on Wednesday, February 21st, 1883, at 2 o'clock P. M., at which time and place the Selectmen of said Town will fix and determine the location and manner of construction of the track of the Boston & Lynn Railroad Company in the streets mentioned in said petition. At which meeting the abuttors and other citizens interested may appear and show cause, if any there be, why said track should not be located and constructed.

RESOLUTION OF RESPECT.

At a meeting held by the employes of the late George Upton, the following resolution was passed.

RESOLVED, that by his death we lose a kind, generous and firm friend, ready at all times to extend a helping hand and influence in any trouble and honest transaction. None knew him any better than those that came in daily contact with him.

VOTED, that we sympathize with his family in their deep loss, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the family.

Per Order.

Peabody, Feb. 3, 1883.

NOTICE.

The undersigned would give notice to the public that HENRY C. WILSON has no connection whatever with his depot carriage or job wagon, and those wishing his services will please be sure their orders are given to him personally, or left on his slate.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

At the High Mass in St. John's church last Sunday, Rev. M. J. Masterson read a financial statement, showing the standing of the church for the year ending Dec. 31, 1882. The total receipts for the year were $6,901.90. This amount was realized from the following sources; pew-rent, $4,206.90, monthly church debt collections, $2,695. The total expenditures amounted to $6,787.50, which sum deducted from the total receipts leaves a balance of $114.40 in favor of the church. The church debt has been reduced nearly $2000 during the year, making the present debt on the church about $15,500. There is an insurance of $44,000 on the parish property, including $32,500 on the church, and $2,000 on the organ. The clergymens' salaries amount to $1400 per annum, the organist receives $400, the janitor $240, and the sexton $120. The Sisters of Notre Dame receive for services about $150. The Rev. Pastor deserves great praise for the efficient manner in which he has managed the affairs of the parish during his connection therewith.

The Right Worthy Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. of Massachusetts convened at Odd Fellows' hall Boston last Thursday. By the report of the secretary it appears that during the past six months five subordinates have been instituted, and there are now in this State 164 lodges; 851 new members have been initiated, 140 have died, and the total membership at the present time is 27,483, being a gain of 505; 8721 weeks' benefits have been paid to 1244 sick brothers, amounting to $27,244.52. From the report of the thirteen Odd Fellows' mutual benefit associations, it appears that there were, January 1, 1883, 11,534 members; 149 having died during the year. Theodore P. Teague and Geo. E. Lewis from this town were present.

Monday evening the Murray association gave a reception to the Parish which was largely attended. The entertainment consisted of readings and recitations by Misses Raddin and Cook, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague and Mr. N. A. Harrington. The dialect reading of Mr. Sprague was one of the brightest features of the evening and the applause that followed Mrs. Sprague's recitation of the "Husband's Complaint" showed how well it was appreciated by the gentlemen present. The Musical portion of the entertainment was contributed by Mrs. A. H. Merrill, Miss Nellie Bartlett, Miss Davis, Mr. Harry Spofford and Mr. C. S. Goldthwait. Mr. Arthur Pinder, an old favorite, being present responded to urgent requests, with piano solos, which were much enjoyed.

Venus is the morning star. On the 16th she is stationary for a few days, pausing in her west-ward course toward the sun. Mars is morning star and will be in conjunction with Mercury on the 13th at 6 a. m. Uranus is the morning star, and is fast approaching the point when he is in the most favorable condition for being seen with the naked eye. Mercury is evening star until the 5th and morning star the rest of the month. Jupiter is evening star and sets on the 1st at 4 a. m. Saturn is evening star and precedes Jupiter nearly three hours in rising and setting. Neptune is evening star. The moon will take on three phases during the month, fulling on the 21st at 7.34 p. m.

Our enterprising friend who left town a few weeks since for the West, has in his travels and explorations discovered a Bonanza which he proposes to annex to his phosphate mine now on Liberty street, Peabody. The object of his mission is sufficiently indicated by the following card which he has sent home in advance of his own arrival. "Gate City Rendering Works, Manufacturers and Dealers in Tallow, Neatsfoot Oil, Grease, Superphosphate, Bones, Bone Fertilizer, Hoofs, Glue-Stock and Glue, Kansas City, Mo. A. L. Ames, Proprietor." There appears to be just one construction to be put upon this movement, and we hope there will be "millions in it" for our friend.

Despite the unfavorable weather the tea party at Upton's hall last Wednesday evening under the direction of Mrs. Robbins and the Ladies Social Circle was one of the most successful for several years. Supper was served at 8.30 o'clock, the menu consisting of cold meats, baked beans, cakes, fruit, hot coffee etc., all of which were much enjoyed. After the supper the company was entertained by a large chorus under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Sperry and many of the old time pieces were sung. The affair was a success both financially and socially.

At this writing the condition of Mr. Chas. W. Brine seems to be quite unfavorable to his recovery. The physicians consider his case doubtful.

South Peabody.

Rev. J. W. Colwell preached last Sabbath a discourse commemorative of his second year's labors in South and West Peabody. His text was from I Samuel 7: 12, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

A tabular statement shows the whole number of sermons preached during the year, to be 90. Pulpit exchanges, 5, number of prayer meetings conducted, 81, other meetings, 44. Total number of services, 215. Amount of Benevolent contributions, $41.69. Infant baptisms, 5. Marriages solemnized, 7. Funerals attended, 8. Pastoral calls, 300. Owing to the extra work which has been precipitated by the new enterprise of church building, the full complement of pastoral visits has not been reached.

Mr. Colwell, after touching upon different features of the work of the year, spoke especially of the efforts now taxing the attention and strength of the people, of church-building. After mature deliberation, with efforts to so shape circumstances as to lead to this new work, the people were first publicly urged to enter upon this duty, in the first anniversary sermon of the Pastor, a year ago. On Mon. Feb. 13, the Society voted to try and raise the sum of $5000, as a building fund, and on the Sabbath of June 18, just 4 months and 6 days after the proposition to build was made, the announcement was given from the pulpit that this sum—sufficient to warrant the beginning of the work—had been pledged. Of this sum $2121 were secured in this church and community. The generous gift of Mr. Abel Proctor and family, of $1100, was followed by other generous donations, by members of the South church and congregation and by others of our fellow citizens. About four-fifths of the subscriptions have already been paid. Over $2500 were given by the South Church. Grateful mention was made of the efforts of Mr. Joseph Poor, by which several hundred dollars were secured, over and above his own subscription; of the labors of the Young People of the So. Church and Society, in their festival last June; and of the kindness of the "Fernald Concert Co.," in giving their services.

Work on the new house is progressing favorably. In a few days the outside will be completed. The material used in building has all been of first quality. The foundation is substantial, and the super-structure is securely framed with very heavy timber. The outside finish is neat and attractive, the tower especially and the front giving much satisfaction. The workmanship of Messrs. Wingate & Co., is first class in every respect. The Vestry will be ready for occupancy in a few weeks. It will seat over 200 in the large room. Besides this room there is one of ample dimensions for the infant class, and one for the kitchen and library.

More funds will be required to furnish the auditorium, which will seat 300 people, and to provide a very much needed bell and Cabinet Organ. The people earnestly hope to finish the work they have begun during the present year, and to dedicate the church free from debt. In the Spring, Prof. J. Wesley Churchill of Andover will read at Institute Hall for the benefit of the building fund. A Fair and other entertainments will also be in order during the coming spring. By these efforts, supplemented by a few more subscriptions, the work ought to be pushed to completion.

While the people here have been carrying this extra burden of church-building, they have also increased their benevolent gifts; and in no previous year has so much been raised by the weekly offering system, to meet the current expenses of the church and parish. The offerings exceed those of last year over $100. This truly is most encouraging.

Altogether the year has been a prosperous one, and the outlook for the future of the church, never appeared brighter than at present.

Mrs. Carter residing on Lynnfield street died quite suddenly last Wednesday of heart disease. She leaves a husband and family of eight children to mourn her loss. Her remains were placed in the tomb at Cedar Grove cemetery.

Mr. Fred Wiggin met with quite a severe accident one day last week, at the tan yard of L. & G. H. Poor, so that he has been unable to work for several days.

There is a paper in circulation in this part of the town to have the water pipes extended up Lynn, Brown and Lynnfield streets.

Edward E. Taylor is somewhat improved from last week.

The attention of the selectmen should be called to the condition of Brown St. Nearly all of the surface water running from Maple St. and the fields runs down Brown street, crosses the sidewalk and flows into the lands of Geo. Parker to the depth of 12 to 15 in.

A nice place—Our public school.
A cold place—Newhall's ice houses.
A lively place—The house of Hose 5.
A warm place—Reed's grocery store.

A cheerful place—The home of our pastor.

A good place—Our new chapel.

A growing place—Anybody's childrens' nursery.

Miss Nellie Miles of Lynn will give a musical entertainment at the Old Chapel Feb. 8th. Tickets 25 and 15 cts.

Mrs Sanborn, residing on Lynn St., is very low with dropsy around the heart.

The Essex Agricultural Society will hold the 20th Institute at Merrimac Hall, North Andover, Tuesday, Feb. 13th, at 9.30 o'clock A. M. Forenoon subject, "What lessons have the frequent droughts taught? and suggestions for the best water supply for crops and cattle;" paper by J. J. H. Gregory. Afternoon subject, "Farmers' Clubs:—Their aims and purposes; are they beneficial to the farmers? What is their influence on the County Society?" opened by Wm. Cogswell, M. D. An opportunity to discuss these questions will be offered to all. Ladies are especially invited to be present. Collation served in the building. The Eastern Railroad will furnish free return tickets to all points.

Visitors to Centre Harbor, N. H., will miss the genial proprietor of the Central House, Capt. Jas. L. Huntress, who died at Hot Springs, Arkansas, last Friday afternoon. Mr. Huntress was well known this way, as at one time he was the proprietor of the Lowell Island House. He had been proprietor of the Central House since 1854. The house will probably be managed next season by his son, Mr. Henry Huntress, who has had considerable experience with his father.

It will be seen by notice in another column that the Board of Selectmen will give a hearing on the petition of the Lynn & Boston Horse R. R. Co., to extend their track through So. Peabody to this town, Wednesday, Feb. 21, at 2 o'clock P. M., at which time abutors and others interested can be heard. We anticipate but little, if any opposition, and the extension of the road will soon be an accomplished fact.

A not generally known ruling of the Post-office Department is that postage stamps so placed upon an envelope as not to expose their entire surface are not accepted for postage, as in the case of three one-cent stamps placed one over the other, so as to expose only a limited portion of the two stamps first placed thereon, and such letters are treated as one prepaid by a one-cent stamp only.

D. A. & F. H. Caskin, stove dealers, whose place of business on the square is the familiar and favorite resort of very many people in this and the surrounding towns, have a large stock of useful and essential articles of household utility in which they deal, and for reliability and fair dealing they need no indorsement. Call when you want anything.

The room recently taken by the Exchange News Room has been newly painted and the walls tinted and a wide border with a picture molding has been placed around the top. It will be furnished as a reading room. A carpet will be put down and new chairs, card and checker tables added; in fact it will be made as pleasant as possible.

One frosty morning last week, as a school boy was passing the lamp post in front of Ira F. Pray's shoe store, he was dared by his chums to try the experiment of touching his tongue to the iron post. We need not add that that boy is wiser now and that his tongue was considerably burned before the iron would let go.

Blessed is the man who don't live in a corner lot, for he has less snow to shovel off, and is enabled to keep his temper better than his more unfortunate neighbor. And doubly blessed is the man who lives in the second story of his landlord's house, for he has no snow to shovel off.

The coffee party given by Hose 5, last Friday evening at their hall, is pronounced by those who participated as one of the finest dances of the season. The music was furnished by Upton & Tiney's Quadrille Band and was very good. There was a large attendance.

Mr. N. M. Jackman of Salem was in town last Monday evening looking for the officers of Bowditch Lodge, K. of H., whom he was delegated to install. As most of the officers were absent and none of the members were present, the installation was postponed.

Now the man desirous for town office, talks learnedly of the manner in which town affairs should be managed, hoping thereby to impress some listener with his knowledge and thus secure a nomination, even if there is no possibility of his being elected.

The Unity Club will meet next Monday night at the residence of Mrs. Walker, on Warren street. During the evening a short farce, "Ten minutes for refreshments," will be presented by Horace G. Wheeler, Dr. Weston and others of the club.

If you desire a first class barrel of family flour, call on L. F. Moulton & Co., 26 Central street.

Essex, ss. Probate Court.

To the Heirs at-law, Next of Kin and all other Persons interested in the Estate of GEORGE UPTON, late of Peabody, in said county, glue-manufacturer, deceased,

GREETING:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said Court for Probate, by Marian C. Upton and Henry Wardwell, who pray that letters testamentary may be issued to them, two of the executors therein named, and that they may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on their bond for the reasons alleged in said petition, (the other executor therein being under the age of twenty-one years). You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the third Monday of February next, at nine o'clock, before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioners are hereby directed to give public notice thereof by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper, called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirtieth day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

QUEEN BESS AND HER FLIRTATIONS.

Simier was one of the handsomest men of his day, the most fascinating and polished of courtiers, and one whose bonnes fortunes were the envy of every gallant in Paris. He had no sooner presented his credentials at the English Court than the inflammatory Elizabeth became completely subjugated by the manners and appearance of the captivating envoy. Leicester at once recognized in the charming Simier a formidable rival and hated him accordingly. The Queen took no pains to hide the pleasure she derived from the society of the new Ambassador; not a day passed without her sending for him; sometimes she would call for him in her barge, and they would take the air together on the Thames; she asked his advice on all matters, and it was often not until late in the evening that she dismissed him from her apartment Such intimacy naturally did not pass without comment. "M. de Simier is no stranger to me," said Elizabeth when reproached with the levity of her conduct, "but a faithful servant of my future husband, knowing all his secrets, and therefore best fitted to advise me and to train me for the position I am to occupy." Under the guidance of the envoy the conditions of the marriage proceeded swiftly and smoothly. The Queen declared that she would marry the Duke; and acting upon the advice of Simier, Alengon hurried to Boulogne, crossed the Channel, and was met at Greenwich by the Queen. The interview between the two passed off better than had been expected; Elizabeth was not disgusted, and the young man played the lover to perfection. He was constantly in her society, and when absent from her wrote letters "burning enough," said one of the envoys at the Court, "to set water on fire." He was lavish of his promises and pledges which courtship generally engenders, and the Queen permitted herself to be fascinated. He was lodged in the next apartment to hers in the palace, and Elizabeth, with her usual disregard of the world's opinion, behaved to him very much as she had behaved to Simier, who, his mission now accomplished, had returned to Paris laden with gifts. Mary Stuart, well aware of the remarks her sweet cousin had passed upon the intimacy between herself and Rizzio, was not slow to retaliate. Those who wish to learn what the opinion Mary of Scotland entertained of Elizabeth of England, have only to read the letters of the unhappy woman published by Prince Labanoff —Gentleman' Magazine.

PUMA HUNT R'.

The Tigreros are ugly, squat Indians, with big heads, small grave eyes, and a stupid type of mouth. They all came from Nicaraguan territory, for there are no Indians in Costa Rica, saving the wild tribes of Guatuso and Talamanco—so, at least, we were assured. The latter, I fancy, are known well enough. It is not dangerous for a peddler to visit them, and those anxious to learn their appearance and their manners will find published material—that is to say, I think so, for our travels never led us near their country, and, personally, I know nothing. The Guatusos or Pranzos are much more savage, and no man living in that day, I cannot tell how it be now, could give serious information regarding them. A couple of spears, one long and one shorter, made the equipment of the Tigrero. Their dogs—big, slouching, light-colored animals—were evidently related to the coyote. Dangerous rather than savage, not prone to bark, they perform the role of house dogs badly. The Don assured us that puppies will not bark, at all unless taught by others. But they learn at once, thus differing from the thoroughbred coyote, which can only howl and whimper in the first generation of domesticity, and seldom succeeds in learning a true bark until the third. We asked why a dollar was granted for a skin puma, and but half a dollar for a jaguar, seeing that the latter animal is much more dangerous and destructive. It appears that in the fashion of hunting to which these Indians obstinately adhere the less terrible beast causes the greatest loss of life. Tigreros go in couples, the head man in advance with his two spears, the subordinate following with his machete or chopping knife. The jaguar is easily tracked, and he does not go far when roused. So soon as it is thoroughly conveyed to his mind that these intruders wish to see him personally, he turns with a roar that always gives sufficient warning to such practiced shikaris. A moment afterward he comes trotting up. The foremost Indian kneels, holding a spear in either hand, the long one furthest out—his companion stands at the side. The jaguar does not pause, but gathering himself up cleaves the air in a mighty bound, his forelegs wide asunder, and claws hooked to rend. Very seldom does it happen that the long spear fails to transfix his unprotected chest, or the shorter one his throat.—Belgravia

CONCERNING EARLY MARRIAGES.

Early marriages, an English paper reports, are nowhere so common as in the manufacturing districts of Lancashire. If this is true, the operatives are evidently able to save something from their earnings, meagre as they are. Boys and girls earn relatively as much as their elders, and, leading a rather independent existence when outside of their factories, it is as natural as rolling off a log for them to join hands. Neither in New England nor Old England can families be supported on the wages of husbands and fathers in cotton mills. In both countries mothers and children work in the factories, too. Hence the marriage of operatives rather economizes living expenses, for the young wife goes on earning her living as before.

Do but half of what you can, and you will be surprised at your diligence.

He who can suppress a moment's anger may prevent a day of sorrow.

HOW TO WASH A BABY.

Thirty women listened for thirty minutes recently, in the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, to Miss Mary Hobart, who told them "How to Wash and Dress a Baby." The lecture was illustrated. The illustration was kindly furnished by a young mother in the audience. It had a red face, very bright eyes, a wee bit of a nose, and a voice. The lecturer, a fresh-faced, handsome woman, began by explaining how to wash and dress a newly born infant without drowning it in a basin or causing it to burst by tight bandaging "White Castile soap is the proper thing to wash a babe with," said she, "and the water should be at a temperature of 100°. The babe should not be washed a little at a time. Its head, face, and ears should be attended to first, and then the entire body should be immersed in the water."

The illustration was placed in a deep basin filled with water, and the illustration manifested its disapprobation by a howl. "In drying the child," continued Miss Hobart, as she lifted the squalling bit ot humanity out of the bath, "do not rub the child much but pat it carefully until dry. Rub its back if you like—that pleases a babe. Then powder it with starch or Burmuda arrowroot," and the squaller was liberally besprinkled with a white powder. "Some mothers" said the lecturer, "in drying a child's ears dig it out this way." The illustration blinked its eyes, puckered up its mouth, and let out a wild yell. "Use a soft rag, wound around the little finger," and, as the action was suited to the word, the illustration crowed gratefully. "In dressing," went on the speaker, "the bandages should be loose enough to slip two fingers underneath," and as the babe was deftly turned on its stomach it grunted a satisfied grunt. Then came the ticklish operation of pinning the band. Miss Hobart showed how to do it without sticking the pin more than a sixteenth of an inch into the baby's back, a proceeding, she said, that nearly all infants objected to. The lecturer advised that where it was practicable and could be done properly the broad linen straps could be sewed and not pinned. "In putting on the babe's socks," continued the pro tem. mother, cleverly thursting a little pink foot into its woolly covering, "be careful about tootsey-wootsey's 'ittle toes. 'E don't like 'e 'ittle toes all turned up, do 'e ?" and the illustration lifted up its voice and howled a denial.

Miss Hobart then took a small piece of soft rag and washed out the child's mouth, something, she said, that should be done after each meal. General advice was then given on keeping the baby away from a strong light; how to handle it properly, and how to soothe it to sleep when fretful. The lecture was concluded by a practical illustration, showing how to change the bed clothing expeditiously and without discomfort to the mother. The babe, comfortably dressed, and crowing with delight, was handed back to his mother, and the audience dispersed.—Chicago Herald.

MONSTER SAUSAGES.

It was formerly the custom in some German town for the butchers to carry about an immense sausage on New Year's Day, and make merry over it. The butchers of Konigsberg made one, in 1583, which was five hundred and ninety-six yards long, weighed four hundred and ninety-four pounds, and contained, beside other ingredients, thirty-six hams, and was borne by ninety-one journeyman butchers, on wooden forks.

After an interval of eighteen yeays, the butchers of Konigsberg made a much larger sausage, which was one thousand and five yards long, and for which they employed eighty-one smoked hams, and eighteen pounds and a quarter of pepper, and it weighed nearly nine hundred pounds.

They carried it round the town on New Year's Day, 1601, with great solemnity, and accompanied by bands of music, and then ate it in company with the bakers, who had made out of twelve bushels of rye flour eight loaves, each five yards long, and baked six huge cakes, which they carried in procession through the town, on the 6th of January, and which the butchers afterward helped them devour.—*G. A forgiving spirit—"As we forgive them that tresspass against us."

A watchful spirit—"Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil."

A believing and adoring spirit—"For Thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory forever. Amen."—Ex.

A Baltimore pilot was examinedby a physician for color-blindness, by the usual test of sorting out colored worsteds of various shades, and was rejected as being partially red-blind and totally green-blind. The local inspectors of steamers afterwards examined him by the colored lights, and he distinguished the colors every time, and was granted a pilot's certificate.

MARVELOUS CURE OF STONE IN THE BLADDER —LARGE STONES REMOVED BY "KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY."

From the Pittsfield, (Mass.,) Eagle.

Stone in the Bladder is at once a most annoying and very dangerous ailment; but many most remarkable cures have of late been wrought by "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy"—the invention of Dr. Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y. Another striking case is now added to the list. Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., states in a letter to Dr. Kennedy that he had been troubled with bladder complaint for 14 years, and had consulted at different times seven physicians; but nothing beyond temporary alleviation of the pain had been worked for him. Towards the end of last January Mr. Lawler called on Dr. Kennedy, Sounding him, the doctor "struck stone." He decided that Mr. Lawler should first try the "Favorite Remedy," so as, if possible, to avoid an operation. And here is the remarkable result: "Dear Doctor Kennedy—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. If you would like to see the stones I will send them to you." This letter bears date "Dalton, Mass., Feb. 6," and is signed "Peter Lawler." The stones, which are so large as to warrant for "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" the claim that it is the most successful specific for Stone yet discovered, are now in Dr. Kennedy's possession. Incidentally Mr. Lawler also states that the "Favorite Remedy" at the same time cured him of a stubborn case of rheumatism; and it is a fact that in all affections arising out of disorders of the liver or urinary organs it is a searching remedy and works marvelous benefits. It is in itself almost a medicine chest. Order it of your druggist. Price $1 a bottle. jan 17

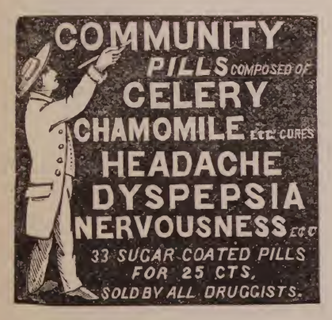
LINCOLN READS A POEM.

Honest Old Abe Entertains his Cabinet with a Little Quotation.

"Now, gentlemen, you all have more or less poetry in your souls; listen to this," and Abraham Lincoln, then President, rose from his chair, in his office in the White House, and read, in trembling tones, which indicated his own profound appreciation of it, Dr. O. W. Holmes' "Last Leaf," of which the following are two verses:



"They say that in his prime.
Ere the pruning knife of time
Cut him down;
Not a better man was found
By the crier in his round
Through the town.

Now the mossy marbles rest
On the lips that he had pressed
In their bloom;
And the names he loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb."

Mr. Michael Guilfoyle, of Binghamton, N. Y., is not as old as the venerable Boston citizen of whom the poet wrote with such tender pathos, yet he is more than three score and ten. "For the past eight of those years," he writes, "I have been a perfect cripple from rheumatism, hobbling about as best I could with my cane, I took PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and am now supple and strong as a gymnast. There is no trace of the disease left about me."

Mr. R. W. Mosher, wholesale druggist, of Binghamton, writes Messrs. HISCOX & Co., of New York—Proprietors of the Tonic—certifying to Mr. Guilfoyle's declaration.

Having all the properties of any preparation of ginger, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is a remedy of infinitely greater range and power. It cures all diseases arising from an impure state of the blood or imperfect digestion. Dyspepsia (and all its consequences), Malarial Fevers, Sick Headache, Kidney troubles, Bronchitis, and common Coughs and Colds, vanish at its touch. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Larger size the cheaper.

Miscellaneous.

DEATH OF THE OLD WIFE.

She had lain all day in a stupor, breathing with heavily-labored breath, but as the sun sank to rest in the far-off Western sky, and the red glow on the wall of the room faded into dense shadows, she awoke and called feebly to her aged partner, who was sitting motionless by the bedside; he bent over his dying wife and took her wan, wrinkled hand in his.

"Is it night?" she asked in tremulous tones, looking at him with eyes that saw not.

"Yes," he answered softly. "It is growing dark.

"Where are the children?" she queried; "are they all in?"

Poor old man! How could he answer her?—the children had slept for years in the old church-yard.

"The children are safe," answered the old man, tremulously; "don't think of them, Janet, think of yourself? Does the way seem dark?"

"My trust is in Thee. Let me never be confounded. What does it matter if the way is dark?"

"I'd rather walk with God in the dark, than walk alone in the light.

"I'd rather walk with him by faith than walk alone by sight."

"John, where's little Charlie?" she asked. Her mind was again in the past. The grave dust of twenty years had laid on Charlie's golden hair, but the mother had never forgotten him. The old man patted her cold hands, hands that labored so hard that they were seamed and wrinkled and calloused with years of toil, and the wedding ring was worn to a mere thread of gold—and then he pressed his lips to them, and cried; they had encouraged and strengthened him in every trial of life. Why, what a woman she had been! What a worker! What a leader in Israel! Always with the gift of prayer or service. They had stood at many a death-bed together—closed eyes of loved ones, and then sat down with the Bible between them to read the promises. Now she was about to cross the dark river alone.

And it was strange and sad to the old man, and the yellow-haired grand-daughter left them, to hear her babbble of walks in the woods, of gathering May flowers and strolling with John, of petty household cares that she had always put down with a strong, resolute hand; of wedding-feasts and death-bed triumphs; and when at midnight she heard the bridegroom's voice, and the old man bending over her cried pitifully, and the grand-daughter kissed her pale brow there was a solemn joy in her voice as she spoke the names of her children one by one, as if she saw them with immortal eyes, and with one glad smile put on immortality.

They led the old man sobbing away, and when he saw her again the glad morning sun was shining, the air was jubilant with the song of birds, and she lay asleep on the couch under the north window where he had seen her so often lie down to rest while waiting for the Sabbath bell. And she wore the same black silk, and the string of gold beads about her thin neck, and the folds of white tulle. Only now the brooch with his miniature was wanting, and in its place was a white rose and a spray of cedar—she had loved cedar—she had loved to sing over her work:

"Oh, may I in his courts be seen,
Like a young cedar, fresh and green."

But what strange transformations were there! The wrinkles were gone. The traces of age, and pain, and weariness were smoothed out; the face had grown strangely young, and a placid smile was on the pale lips. The old man was awed by this likeness of the bride of his youth. He kissed the unresponsive lips, and then said, softly:

"You've found Heaven first, Janet, but you'll come for me soon. It's our first parting in more than seventy years, but it won't be for long—it won't be for long!"

And it was not. The Winter snow had not fallen, and there is another grave, and to-day would have been their diamond wedding! We had planned much for it, and I wonder—I wonder—but no! Where they are there is neither marriage nor giving in marriage.—Detroit Free Press.

EMPLOYING CHILDREN IN FRANCE.

Le Journal Officiel has during the last month published several notices forbidding the employment of children in certain industrial processes, such as the manufacture of salysilic acid, celluloid, and some of the preparations of sulphur, which are injurious from the vapors given off. Boys under sixteen and girls under eighteen, are not allowed to be employed in rag picking and sorting, except in very well ventilated workshops. Boys under fourteen, and girls under sixteen, are forbidden to drag loads in the public streets, nor are they allowed to do so in any factory, yard or workshop, except on level floors, and with a load not exceeding 100 kilogrammes (including the truck) in weight. Boys between fourteen and and sixteen, however, may do so in the public roads provided this weight is not exceeded. Children are forbidden to be employed in any factory engaged in cutting or grinding bone, horns, mother of pearl, or in fact, any material of the kind which evolves much dust. Slaters and plumbers are also forbidden to employ children on any work whatever on the roofs of houses, or in any place where there would be any risk of injury from falls.

Money and fame are two things that men work hardest for; and after death one is worth just about as much to them as the other.

The point of the shaft of wit should never be dipped in poison.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,
And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.
Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.
J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.
P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment
CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rocklottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jeffs the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it."

J. E. Brunton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

The NEW YORK, 1883. Sun.

More people have read THE SUN during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read and like THE SUN for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs THE SUN makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability. Three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whale as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The SUN has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

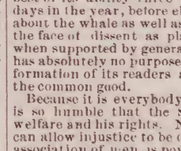
Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the SUN is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robesonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, the SUN stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the SUN is the best religious newspaper ever published, because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor—A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the SUN discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the SUN, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before—If you do not already know the SUN, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of commonsense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government, a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

Terms to Mail Subscribers.



The several editions of THE SUN are sent by mail, postpaid, as follows:

DAILY—55 cents a month. $6.50 a year; with Sunday edition, $7.70.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—$1 year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues; an Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, market reports, and literary, scientific and domestic intelligence make THE WEEKLY SUN the newspaper for the farmer's household. To clubs of ten with $10, an extra copy free. Address

COLOGNE

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
For 1883,
SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March-1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency, in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

Journal of Travel to California in the Early Days.

NO. I.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10, 1850.—Left home this day and took passage on the cars of the Eastern Railroad for Boston, where I arrived in due time, and stopped at the United States Hotel, so as to be able to take passage to New York at an early hour to-morrow morning on the express train. Like most of the experiences of emigrants to California, the hour of leaving home and family and friends and entering on a journey of many thousand miles, surrounded as it is with danger and privations which always attend such an enterprise, is a sad and dark one. The cloud of uncertainty which hangs over and around it, and the thousand conjectures which very naturally spring up in regard to the risks and results to themselves and their friends, render it a season fraught with distrust and almost of gloom. It was doubly so to me, weakened in body, from an excess of care, and toil, and suffering from overwork, my health impaired, which nothing would seem to alleviate except a change of climate. I accepted the alternative with reluctance. However high the anticipations or hopes in regard to worldly gain, the risk to life and health in a new country, calls up to the mind of the immigrant (as he views the privations and hardships to which he must of necessity be subjected) a feeling of distrust in himself as it regards strength of mind or body necessary for the fulfillment of the mission.

THURSDAY, 11TH.—Took the cars of the western railroad for New York at 7 o'clock A. M., and arrived at an early hour in the day. Took lodgings at the Pacific Hotel on Greenwich street until the departure of the steamship Southerner for Chagres, on Monday next. This route from Boston to New York has the preference over a sea passage across the Sound by far in the rough season of the year, as it gives to a traveller many fine views of villages along the route.

NEW YORK, FRIDAY, 12th.—I have visited (to-day) many places in the Empire city. The Battery, Castle Garden, City Hall, Park, Trinity Church, and many others which have an interest to a stranger coming from his New England home and winding his way to the wilderness in the far west. Greenwich street seems to be the home of the many different nations congregated here as the clatter of differing languages seem to indicate; the entire volubility of the mass in their use cannot but create a smile on the countenance of those who are unused to hear them. I I have written a letter to my wife and one to Poole and Jacobs to-day. I expect my partner in my travels, Mr. Norcross, this evening. The weather has been fine throughout the early part of the day, but the present appearance of the sky seems to indicate a storm.

SATURDAY, APRIL 13th.—The storm which threatened us yesterday has arrived. It is snow accompanied with rain and hail and chilly cold. Mr. Norcross did not arrive last evening. I shall expect him this afternoon at the arrival of the express train from Boston which is due at 3.30 o'clock. The weather is such as precludes a person from making observation to-day. Many are hourly arriving here bound for the Eldorado of the west and like myself, chained to the narrow compass of a traveller's home by the state of the weather when the limited time of our stay would urge us to go abroad, as the wish is so strong in any one visiting New York to view the places of interest around us and gain the knowledge and information which the sight of those places very naturally impart. Well may the City of New York be called a great world, for it possesses all of the elements within it necessary to constitute a world. It numbers in its population members of every nation, tongue and kindred on the face of the globe. This combined with its agricultural, mineral, manufacturing and mercantile resources and life, almost sets an entire sanction to the above idea. My companion in my journey arrived this evening and brought fair weather with him.

SUNDAY, APRIL 14th.—The weather changed very suddenly last evening and is very cool to-day, with a strong wind. This is in New England a day of sacred rest, and as such it is considered here, but how differently is it observed from what it is in our quiet villages at home. Business and interest claim the greater share, while the spiritual obtain (if any at all) the meagre balance for its use. I visited the church where the Rev. Henry W. Bellows ministers to-day, and listened to an interesting discourse upon charity among men. We leave this place to-morrow. How often (since I arrived here) has the thought come up to my mind and suggested the question, how a government like our own so simple in its arrangement, so free and liberal in all its measures, so moderate and calm in its action and movements, and so common in all its features, does, or can hold together in almost entire peace and harmony, and with a vast population as these United States, composed of every grade of nation, feeling and interest, foreign, public and private. But no answer comes up to solve the problem save that which springs from the religious and moral strength of character in the mass, coupled with the strong faith in our institutions, and the energy in the executions of the laws.

J. G. PHELPS.

HOUSEHOLD CONVENIENCES A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—In speaking of the household comforts and conveniences enjoyed by our ancestors of a hundred years ago and their descendants of this generation, Dr. Nichols, in the Boston Journal of chemistry, says: Our fathers were groping in almost utter darkness, so far as a knowledge of the sciences was concerned, and but little progress had been made in invention and the arts; scarcely one of the modern contrivances for cooking, and for warming and lighting dwellings, was known. Not a pound of coal or a cubic foot of illuminating gas had been burned in the country. No iron stoves were used, and no contrivances for economizing heat were employed until Dr. Franklin invented the iron frame fire-place, which still bears his name. All the cooking and warming in town and country were done by the aid of fire kindled upon the brick hearth, or in the brick oven. Pine knots or tallow candles furnished the light for the long winter evenings, and sanded floors supplied the place of rugs and carpets. The water used for household purposes was drawn from deep wells by the creaking "sweep," and it is a curious circumstance that both the well and the building meeting the necessities of a water-closet were often at long distances from the house. In a cold windy night in winter, to be called towards either of them was something dreadful to think of. No form of pump was used in this country, so far as we can learn, until after the commencement of the present century. There were no friction matches in those early days, by the aid of which a fire could be speedily kindled; and if the fire "went out" upon the hearth overnight, and the tinder was damp, so that the spark would not "catch," the alternative remained of wading through the snow a mile or so, to borrow a brand of a neighbor. Only one room in any house was warmed (unless some of the family were ill); in all the rest the temperature was at zero during many nights in winter. The men and women of a hundred years ago undressed and retired to their beds at night in an atmosphere colder than that of our modern barns and woodsheds, and they never complained. No hot-air furnaces or steam-pipes tempered the wintry air in their dwellings, and they slept soundly in the cold, even after eating heartily of shagbarks or butternuts, and then washing them down with a quart or two of hard cider. The cooking was very simple, and the nature of the food plain and substantial. But few dishes were seen upon the table; pork and cabbage, corn bread, and milk, with "bean-porridge," were the every-day forms of food consumed.

The number of depositors of the Salem Five Cents Savings Bank has increased 306 during the past year and 142 during the past six months. The increase in the amount of deposits for the year has been $124,039.45. The assets of the Bank are $2,494,287.81 by the Treasurer's report. There is due 7893 depositors $2,368,253.94. The Guarantee Fund is $60,000 and the profits earned and on hand, $66,033.87. During the year ending Oct. 31, 1882, 4965 persons deposited $402,510.43 and withdrew $373,150.04 from 3579 accounts. There were 1013 new accounts opened and 742 closed. For the ten years to October, 1882, 45,390 depositors deposited $3,542,929.02 and $3,732,703.74 was paid to 35,988 persons; 9313 new accounts were opened, and 742 closed. For the ten years to February, 1883, there will have been paid dividends to depositors amounting to $984,083.65, being 48 1-2 per cent., an average of $485 per year at simple interest; but as deposits are allowed to compound, the average is increased to $6,117 per year. The net surplus is $214,557.87.

It will be noted that the through Express train to Philadelphia via the transfer steamer Maryland will be again put on next week. That steamer has been put in thorough repair and cars will leave the depot of the New York and New England Railroad every evening at 6.35. This road is now in first class condition, and in connection with the magnificent steamer "City of Worcester," is fast gaining in popularity in its New York City travel.

Our thanks are due Hon. Eben F. Stone, M.C., from this district, for valuable public documents.

MR. A. B. CROSS, photographer, 256 1-2 Essex street, has very neat rooms for the prosecution of his art, and the specimens he exhibits there are such as impress the beholder with the superiority of his workmanship. He exhibits portraits large and small, and where the photographic art is embellished with painting, it is done with a skillful hand. Mr. Cross offers inducements to clubs and warrants his photographs to be of the best materials.—Salem Register.

One of the most reliable and pleasant advertising agencies that we have ever had any dealings with is the firm of GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., No. 10 Spruce Street, New York. We have never had any trouble in closing contracts with these gentlemen, and we have yet to ask them the second time for money. Those of our readers who would like to advertise through an agent can find no more responsible firm than GEO. P. ROWELL & CO. This is no paid for notice, but is a gratuitous, unasked-for expression of our opinion, because we think they deserve it."—The Isymaelite and Times and Planter, Sparta, Ga., Jan. 3, 1883.

And now the people who want the street railroad companies to stop doing business in winter have again petitioned the legislature for a law prohibiting the use of salt on the tracks. If they succeed in their endeavors there will be more inconvenience to the public, ten times over, than now results from the practice of salting. As to injurious effects of salt upon horses' feet, that idea was exploded long ago. Whose horses would be most likely to be injured if injury there were to be? Why, the railroad companies', of course, but they never fear such results, because none such ever follow.—Cambridge Press.

Dramatic and Musical.

This week Mary Anderson comes to the Boston Theatre. In the lady's previous engagements in that city, even the spacious Boston Theatre has been found too small to accommodate the throngs of Mary Anderson's admirers; and there is every indication that equal popular success will attend her. She opened on Monday in Ingomar and the play is announced for repetition for Friday night and the matinee on Saturday. "The Daughter of Roland," is to present the actress on Thursday evening. "Fazio," with the star as Bianca, is the play selected for Saturday night.

At the Park Theatre Miss Mather has been enthusiastically received, and the play of Romeo and Juliet is to be continued through the week. Boston has simply confirmed the judgment of other cities, in its remarkable popular indorsement of the star. It is announced that after the close of the week, she will be seen in "Leah the Forsaken," and the fourth and last week she will appear in "Lady of Lyons," and "As you like it," as Pauline and Rosalind.

At the Globe Theatre Miss Ida Jeffreys Lewis will appear for a week. This lady, it may be remembered, was summoned from New York to take Fanny Davenport's place in "Pique," which was then running at that theatre, a number of years ago. She is to be seen in "La Belle Russe," a play that is spoken of as peculiarly adapted to her abilities. Some very elegant costumes will be displayed by the star. The cast of characters in the comedy is the same as enjoyed a prosperous season at Wallack's Theatre, New York, and will be seen here under the management of Frank L. Goodwin.

Mr. Geo. H. Tyler, having retired from the management of the Bijou Theatre, will be succeeded by E H. Hastings, formerly treasurer of the management. "Iolanthe" is underlined until further notice.

Colonel Mapleson's singing birds in grand array will bring Italian opera for a two-weeks' stay to the Boston Theatre on Monday evening, February 26. It will be a great and memorable season. Adelina Patti will be heard there for the first time in connection with a corps of performers worthy to take part with her in lyric works.

"The Two Orphans," always a great attraction, will be presented at the Globe next week. Miss Sarah Jewett, whose impersonation of Louise has met with much favor, will be seen for the first three performances of the week, and then Miss Kate Claxton, whose health is rapidly improving, will essay the role she has made famous.

Miss Ada Dyas, who was for a long time the leading lady of Wallack's Theatre, and who recently appeared in Salem, will appear as Mrs. Dick in Young Mrs. Winthrop at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, during the rest of its run. Agnes Booth, who played that part heretofore, will play the part of Young Mrs. Winthrop. This will be a most brilliant cast.

To-morrow evening N. W. Andrews & Co. will bring to Salem Hyde & Behman's specialty company. Of this attraction the Cincinnati Enquirer says: The features of the olio were the sketch by Dave Oakes and Jessie Boyd; Kate Cooper, in songs; the Martell Family, in acrobatic act and their fine bicycle performance, and Sam Devere in his banjo solos. The latter was called to respond to a half dozen hearty encores, and the audience were not satisfied. The farce-comedy called "The Two Johns," introduced as the heroes a couple of three-hundred pound comedians—John Hart and John Stewart—who, with the assistance of a very fair cast, gave the audience about an hour of constant laughter.

Friday evening the Boston Theatre Company appear in Mechanic Hall in the "White Slave," and when it is known that Mr. Redmond, Mrs. Thos. Barry and the other leading members of the home theatre are to appear, we expect to see an audience only limited by the capacity of the hall. Miss Louise Muldener, who received so much praise for her graceful assumption of the "White Slave" in Boston will be seen in Salem.

It is said that Moulton & Johnson will bring Margaret Mather to Salem, at the close of her engagement at the Park.

Boucicault is coming to Salem on Friday evening, March 16, when he will appear at Mechanic Hall in his new play of "Amadan."

H. B. Hooper again brought Little Corinne to the Peabody Institute last Friday evening, in Cinderella or the Magic Slipper. Mr. Frank Hayden, the tenor, being ill, Miss Ida Farrell took the part of the "Prince" to the entire satisfaction of the audience. There was no hooting or shouting in the galleries, and Mr. Hooper is certainly certainly deserving of credit in having this usual disturbance in our Institute suppressed. The Cadet Orchestra, advertised to appear, did not come, owing to the illness of Mr. Hayden, thus preventing a rehearsal with the company.

Miss Carrie Swain appeared last Friday night in her new play of "Mab" in Mechanic Hall. She was greeted with a full house, received several encores, and in all respects gave general satisfaction.

John McCullough, supported by Kate Forsythe and a splendid company, appeared as Virginius in Mechanic Hall, Monday evening. The audience was appreciative and enthusiastic, calling the star several times before the curtain. Miss Forsythe is the finest actress that has appeared in Salem this season. The Salem Cadet Orchestra in full numbers were present, and received a generous share of applause.

Next Monday evening "Iolanthe" with Snyder and Grau's company of 45 people, and their own orchestra, will be brought out in Mechanic Hall. Miss Helen Dayne as Iolanthe has received the most flattering enconiums from the press; in fact the entire company has met with unusual success. They will compare favorably with any company presenting this opera.

Wednesday evening Feb. 21, Hart & Sullivan's female minstrels.—Thursday afternoon and evening, (Washington's birthday) Lizzie May Ulmer in '49.

The growth of horse railroad travel in Lynn is something wonderful. The building of the Summer street branch was considered of doubtful expediency by many, and it was said it would take most of its business from the South Common Street line. But the Summer Street cars do a large business, and the old line traffic has increased so much that a double track is called for over the South Common street route. Doubts were expressed as to the success of the Wyoma and Myrtle street branches, but they have proved to be among the most profitable patrons of the road. The more people ride the more they want to ride. The average number of way passengers upon the horse cars in Lynn, during the winter, is more than 5000, and nearly double the number in summer. The horse car is the poor man's carriage, and in our city at least he believes in it, and appreciates its skillful and liberal management.—Lynn Item.

Messrs. Merrill & Mackintire are now comfortably settled in their new quarters, at 220 Essex street. In the front store they make a fine display of stationery, books, etc., and in their new addition their room papers have a special department. This room is specially lighted by a skylight and when quite completed will afford a light, quiet and comparatively retired place for selecting room papers. The store is well arranged for business and in the large building in the rear there is ample room for the storage of the large stock that this firm carries.—Register.

Last Sunday morning the mercury was up to twenty-eight degrees above zero and during the forenoon and the night before snow fell to the depth of five inches. A year ago the corresponding day the thermometer registered just the same and the snow fall was two inches. Singular.

The shoe business in Lynn, Mass., has a promising outlook for the remainder of the Winter and the Spring. There is at present a lull in manufacturing, which is usually the case in the time between the receipt of the first and second orders. A fair estimate is that over two-thirds of the operatives are busy. The Fall trade is so lengthened by supplementary orders that the season lapped over into the Winter trade, almost without a perceptible lull between. This fact is unusual, as in years past there have been from six weeks to two months of idleness for the bulk of the operatives. The volume of business now being transacted is far in advance of a corresponding period of last year, and in fact, the shoe shipments since early last Fall have increased from thirty to forty per cent. over those for the preceding year. The shipments for 1882 exceeded those for 1881 by 26,577 cases, and those for 1882 exceeded those for 1878 by 111,157 cases. In making a comparison between the shipments for 1882 and 1878 it will be but just to allow for smaller cases used in 1882, in order to make a fair estimate as to the relative number of pairs shipped. Thus the apparent gain of 111,157 cases for 1882 was really but about 100,000 cases, after having allowed for the case variations. Even with this deduction the increase is very gratifying. The leading manufacturers express themselves as highly satisfied with the prospect. They expect to very soon receive their second orders, after which the season's business will probably move uninterruptedly until May.—Manufacturer's Gazette.

The friends of the proposed horse railroad to Lynn should turn out to the hearing next Wednesday before the Selectmen. Some opposition is anticipated and there should be a good attendance from this part of the town.

As we went to press last Wednesday evening our steam pump for supplying the boiler with water, gave out, and we were obliged to run the press at full speed on what water there was in the boiler. Owing to the rapidity with which we run, the cutter could not be used, and our papers were sent out in the old form.

An interesting letter from Miss Nellie Pingree, of San Antonio, Texas, will be found on our eighth page. Miss Pingree is the daughter of Wm. H. Pingree, formerly of this town, and will be remembered by many of our readers. Miss Pingree is a graduate of our Peabody High School, which is evidenced by the diction and grace of her correspondence.

It is stated that further efforts looking to the organization of a Young Men's Christian Association in this town, as had been contemplated, are to be deferred till next fall, the season now being so far advanced as to render it practically impossible to get such an association into successful working order till after another summer.

The Goodwillie-Wyman Co., dealers in printers' machinery, 41 Federal St., Boston, have sent us the "loudest" calendar for 1883 we have seen. The figures are big enough to be seen without a magnifying glass.

On account of the funeral services of Miss Stanley, the regular meeting of the Unity Club, of which the deceased was a member, was adjourned for two weeks. It will meet Monday evening Feb. 26th, with Mrs. Walker.

Last Saturday the lumber arrived for the new baggage room at the Railroad station and work was begun immediately. This is a part of the contemplated improvements at this station. The ticket offices will also be enlarged.

The Ladies of the P. S. Society hold their next meeting at Ashland Hall on Thursday Feb. 15, afternoon and evening. A chowder supper will be served from 6 till 7, after which vocal and instrumental music, games, dancing and declamations.

Mr. Jesse Smith the blacksmith has been making improvements in his shop by changing around the forges and arranging things generally so as to facilitate work. Mr. Smith employs four men and is prepared and has the facilities for doing a large business.

Mrs. M. O. Stevens addressed the Legislative committee on the liquor question at the "green" room last Wednesday. She claimed that the Commonwealth is accessory to nine-tenths of the crime in this state which came from licensing dram shops.

At the meeting of the Liberal Club, in Salem, Dr. Dudley will illustrate Quartette singing by his own choir, and he will also present a female quartette, composed of Misses Dalton and Felt, of Salem, and Mrs. J. Henry Osgood, and Mrs. F. C. Ferguson, of this town.

Mrs. Murphy on Dennis street, who keeps a boarding house, had one of her boarders disappear last Sunday night, and on the next morning a toilet set was discovered to be absent and the probabilities are, that they both departed together. The police are looking for both articles.

Poet's Corner.

His Debut in Print.

Ah! here it is! I'm famous now—
An author and a poet!
It really is in print! ye gods!
How proud I'll be to show it!
And gentle Annie!—what a thrill
Will animate her breast
To read these ardent lines, and know
To whom they are addressed.

Why, bless my soul! here's something strange,
What can the paper mean
By talking of the "graceful brooks
That gander o'er the green?"
And here's a t, instead of r,
Which makes it "tippling rill;"
"We'll seek the "shad," instead of "shade;"
And "hell," instead of "hill."

"They look so sweet, so bland and kind,"
"They look so"—what! I recollect,
'Twas "sweet" and then 'twas "kind;"
And now, to think, the stupid fool
For "bland" has printed "blind."
'Tis curious, by the by,
How anything is rendered blind
By giving it an eye.

"Hast thou no tears"—the t's left out,
"Hast thou no ears" instead,
"I hope that thou art dear" is put
"I hope that thou art dead."
Who ever saw in such a space
So many blunders crammed?
"Those gentle eyes bedimmed" is spelt
"Those gentle eyes bedamned."

"The color of the rose" is "nose,"
"Affection" is "affliction:"
I wonder if the likeness holds
In fact as well as fiction?
"Thou art a friend"—the r is gone;
Who ever would have deemed
That such a trifling thing could change
A "friend" into a "fiend."

"Thou art the same" is rendered "lame,"
It really is too bad;
And here, because an i is out,
My "lovely maid" is "mad;"
They made her blind by poking in
An eye—a process new;
And now they've gouged it out again
And made her crazy, too.

"Where are the muses fled, that thou Should'st live so long unsung?"
Thus read my version—here it is—
"Should'st live so long unhung;"
"The fate of woman's love is thine,"
And h commences "fate;"
How small a circumstance will turn
A woman's love to hate.

I'll read no more! What shall I do?
I'll never dare to send it;
The paper's scattered far and wide
'Tis now too late to mend it—
Oh, Fame! thou cheat of human bliss!
Why did I ever write?
I wish my poem had been burnt
Before it saw the light.

Let's stop and recapitulate:
I've d——d her eyes, that's plain—
I've told her she's a lunatic,
And blind, and deaf, and lame;
Was ever such a horrid hash
In poetry or in prose?
I've said she was a fiend, and praised
The color of her nose.

I wish I had that editor
About a half a minute,
I'd bang him to his heart's content,
And with an h begin it;
I'd jam his body, eyes and nose,
And spell it with a d,
And send him to that hill of his,
And spell it with an e.

Sonnet.

BY ELLA WHEELER.

Methinks oftimes, my heart is like some bee
That goes forth through the summer day, and sings,
And gathers honey from all growing things
In garden plot, or on the clover-lea.
When the long afternoon grows late, and she
Would seek her hive, she cannot lift her wings,
So heavily the too sweet burden clings,
From which she would not, and yet would, fly free.
So with my full, fond heart. For when it tries
To lift itself to peace-crowned heights above
The common way where countless feet have trod,
So, then, this burden of dear human ties,
This growing weight of precious earthly love,
Binds down the spirit that would soar to God.

—Good Cheer.

Selected Story.

Romance of House Cleaning.

'Is she coming to visit you?' said Eric Hale, with a slight grimace. 'That simpering fine lady, with the useless white hands and the shallow little society laugh? Oh, Aunt Delia, pack my portmanteau and let me be off on a lecturing tour until Flora Lee's visit comes to an end!'

Mrs. Dove looked a little dissappointed. To confess the truth, she had especially arranged this visit with reference to her nephew Eric.

'He's a fine young fellow,' she said to herself, with true diplomacy, 'with an excellent parish and fine prospects—and it's high time he was settled in life with a wife. And I think Flora Lee would suit him exactly.'

And here was the young man himself upsetting this charming little castle-in-the-air without the least scruple of conscience, like the modern iconoclast that he was.

'Well, Eric,' said Mrs. Dove, despairingly, 'I'll write her not to come. Of course I don't want to put you out, just when you are so busy, too, with that course of lectures on the Book of Revelation—but I thought that Flora would make the house lively.'

'She's a deal too artificial to suit me,' said Eric Hale. 'Ask her to come in June, when I shall be off to Omaha and Nevada, or that conference business. But as for a visitor, I should prefer little Polly Peppercorn's big wax doll with the silky hair and staring eyes, that open and shut by machinery.'

So Mrs. Dove, choking back her disappointment, (for she had been nursing this pet secret for a long time,) sat down and wrote a letter to her friend Miss Lee, postponing the proposed visit to Cedarborough Farm until roses should be in bloom and strawberries beginning to ripen.

'Adonijah,' said she to the hired man, 'take this letter to the post office'

'Yes, 'um,' said Adonijah, and he put it in his pocket and straightway forgot all about it.

It was a dismal, rainy morning in April, the yellow jonquils beaten to the ground, the very wild violets shutting up their eyes as if in unmitigated disgust at the unpromising state of the weather. Overhead, racks of gray cloud scudded across the heavens, and the little sheet of silver lakelet under the hill was dotted and dimpled all over with the falling rain, as if pierced with a thousand tiny javelins.

'It's no use trying,' said Mrs. Dove, plaintively, 'the fates have conspired against me!'

The carpets were up, the pails of white-wash stood steaming in the middle of the parlor floor, and Mrs. Dove herself with her gray curls tied up in a yellow damask pocket handkerchief, which her great uncle had brought from China half a century ago, sat crying on the lower edge of a step-ladder. For Betsey, the help, had fallen down the cellar stairs and broken her leg, and Mrs. Mulrony, the char-woman, had sent a message that on account of sickness in the family she could not undertake house cleaning for the present.

'And these three days of all others,' sighed Mrs. Dove, 'when Eric had exchanged pulpits with Mr. Washburne! And he so dislikes house cleaning; and—'

'Dear me, Mrs. Dove, what is the matter?'

Mrs. Dove started to her feet with a little scream, for there exactly as if she had been rained down out of the gray zenith, stood Flora Lee herself, in a trim brown traveling dress, with a neat little hand bag, a gossamer waterproof cloak and a silk umbrella.

'Why, Flora, how came you here?'

'By the train, of course,' said Miss Lee, 'and I walked from the station.'

'I wrote you not to come,' said Mrs. Dove, in consternation.

'But I never received such a letter,' said Miss Lee; 'shall I go again?'

'No, you darling, you shall do nothing of the sort!' said Mrs. Dove, enthusiastically. 'It was only because—because we were house cleaning.'

'I'm not afraid of house cleaning,' said Flora. 'I see how it is,' with a comprehensive glance around the scene of confusion, 'and I am going to help you through with it.'

'You?' said Mrs. Dove.

'Yes, I! Why not? Just lend me one of Betsey's old dresses. Where is Betsey, by the way?'

'Her father has just carried her home in the wagon,' said Mrs. Dove. 'she broke her leg.'

'And your charwoman?'

'Oh, dear! oh, dear!' said Mrs. Dove. She has got a visitation of the measles, small pox, or some horrid disease in the family; and my nephew, Eric, is to be gone three days; and I made sure that I would finish house cleaning during his absence.'

'And we will!' said Flora, cheerily.

'How can we?'

'Oh, you shall see,' replied Miss Lee.

And, depressed though she was, Mrs. Dove began to feel the mercury rise in her mental thermometer at once.

And Flora Lee arrayed herself in one of Betsey's cast-off calicoes, tied up in a cambric sweeping cap, and went vigorously at work with a scrubbing brush; while Mrs. Dove bent her attention to the window glass, and Adonijah, with more zeal than discretion, splashed the white-wash over himself and the floor with laudable impartiality.

'Wal,' said Adonijah, afterward, 'I never did see no cricket work spryer than that city young lady. By gracious, she beats Betsey all holler at it! And she's got such a nice up and down pretty way of doin' things, too. I declare, I couldn't hardly take my eyes off her all the time I was in there whitewashin'.'

Mrs. Dove, however, was unused to such severe exertions incident upon house cleaning time, and went to bed in the middle of the afternoon.

'Never mind, Mrs. Dove,' said Flora; 'I'll get tea and make some of those cream waffles and a short cake for Mr. Dove, and you shall see how nicely I can fry oysters.'

'Indeed, indeed, I don't know what I should do without you, Flora!' said Mrs. Dove, fervently.

But, as it happened, Mr. Daniel Dove was unexpectedly detained on business at Whiskell, a neighboring town, and instead of him, who should walk debonairly into the sitting room, flinging down his carpet bag, but Eric Hale himself, just as the rainy dusk closed in, and the delicious oysters and the odor of the Mocha coffee filled the house.

'Hello!' said Eric, 'so you're cleaning house—eh, Betsey?'

'Yes, sir,' a demure voice responded from the kitchen.

'And where's my aunt?'

'She has retired with a sick headache.'

'The natural consequence of cleaning, I suppose,' said Eric Hale, with a shrug of the shoulders. 'Dear old Aunt Delia! why couldn't she be contented to leave things as they were? Tell her, Betsey, that Washburne has decided not to exchange until next week, and that, now I'm in the midst of the melee, I'll lend a hand in this business tomorrow.'

'Yes, sir.'

'And Betsey—'

'Sir?'

'Where did you learn to make such delicious coffee? Bring in a cup at once; I'm ready to drop with weariness, and it's like a dream of Arabia.'

And Flora Lee, with the flapping edge of her sunbonnet concealing the amused dimples round her mouth, brought in the coffee and oysters flanked by a pile of feather-light waffles.

'I declare, Betsey,' cried the Reverend Eric, facetiously, 'if you were a trifle younger and prettier I'd marry you myself to make sure of the coffee and waffles like this every night.'

'Would you, sir?' said the soi distant Betsey.

'And we'll make a compact, Betsey, merrily went on the young clergyman, as he helped himself to butter, 'to finish the house cleaning tomorrow, and save Aunt Delia the worry and work of it.'

'Yes, sir,' said Betsey. 'But, please, sir, it's all done except the tacking down of the carpets.'

'Who did it?'

'I, sir, please, and Mrs. Dove, and Adonijah. And please, sir, I'm going to finish it myself to-morrow; and please, sir,' flinging back her sunbonnet and revealing a coronal of brown braids, a pair of rosy cheeks, and hazel eyes full of sparkling mischief—'I'm not Betsey at all, but Flora Lee, entirely at your service!'

'Miss Lee!' he repeated.

'Exactly,' nodded the young lady.

'Did you make the coffee?'

'I did.'

'And fry these brown-jacketed oysters and stir up these waffles?'

'No one else, Mr. Hale.'

'And scrub these rooms?' glancing round.

'Yes, sir; and dusted the cornices, and washed the window glass, and took down all the picture frames, and put the lace curtains to soak, besides other items too numerous to mention,' mischievously added Flora, rather enjoying the discomfiture of the young clergyman.

'Miss Lee,' said Eric. 'I beg you pardon.

'What for, Mr. Hale?'

'For always having regarded you as the most useless of creatures. I recant. I own that you are equal to any emergency.'

And when, later in the evening, Mrs. Dove crept out, with her head tied up in eau de cologne, she found her nephew and Flora Lee playing chess together by the fire, in the most amicable manner imaginable.

'It's all right,' said Mrs. Dove to herself.

It was all right. And Mrs. Eric Hale won her frank, unconventional husband not through the medium of dresses, or jewels, or waltzes, or flower shows, but through the grim realities of cleaning house.

'I wanted a genuine helpmeet,' said the Reverend Eric Hale, 'and I got one.'—Family Monthly.

Leaving The Old Farm.

Sampson Atkins, a farmer near Circleville, O., hung himself because he was compelled to move off a farm on which he had lived since childhood.—Exchange.

And still there are people who will go on wondering and inquiring how to keep the boys on the farm. Here is a man who had grown up with the old farm and become so attached to it, that to leave the scenes of his boyhood broke his heart and he hid his grief in a suicide's grave. There is no sense in talking about how the boys may be kept on a farm. To be sure, farm life is not one continual circus day, as in the city, nor a fourth of July, and farmers can make their sons hate the old farm home by subjecting them to all manner of drudgery, the same as they would a pair of yearling steers, and expect them to wear the yoke and never make a kick. The man alluded to above, had grown up on a farm. He was somebody's son, and no doubt, in his boyhood days he often had a yearning to leave the old farm and go away to the city, and put on a boiled shirt and smoke cigars, and amass a fortune. But he stuck to the old farm, and when he was obliged to leave it, the thought was too much, and he took his own life rather than go. No doubt the thought of leaving the old place, the scenes of his boyhood's happiest hours would arise up before him, and he could see, in looking back o'er a lifetime spent on the old farm, the same narrow winding lane, through which he trudged, when a boy, over the grass and stubble covered with the heavy dew and frost of early morning, and the thought of how he placed his bare foot down on the early bumble bee which nestled among the clover blossoms and sang its morning song, came back to him with the old time vigor. The thought of leaving the dear old home, around whose cheerful fire-place he had spent many a happy evening, and then went to a bed of feathers beneath rafters laden with dried pumpkin and catnip, and seed corn, and cob-webs, and dried apples, was more than the poor man could stand. The many happy scenes of his boyhood days, and the recollections of comfort and plenty, on the old place, would admit of no thoughts on the drawbacks that had sometimes crept in and made him think that life was not worth living for, anyway. The cares and troubles of farm life were drowned deep in the tide of pleasant thoughts, and he never stopped to think as he shed tears at parting with the dear old farm, or how he had got up at four o'clock in the morning and gone down and washed at the pump in the yard, when the weather was so cold that the soap in the jar by the side of the house was frozen solid, and the milk he had warmed for the calf, and bran-mash for the cows had to be broken with a fork handle before the cattle could eat it. He only stopped to think of the spring time, gentle Hannah, when the cows came home at night, the taxes were paid, the crops nearly in, and everything lovely, and it is not to be wondered at that the poor man felt sad at leaving the old home. There is no use talking about keeping boys on the farm when they get the roaming fever, but after a man has been there a lifetime he would not exchange places with a king, and wear a crown, and suffer with the gout and the dyspepsia. There are thousands who know just how that poor man must have felt, and will pity him, as they know that it is often better to own a three hundred acre farm, without a mortgage on it, and a good, sound constitution, than to be the proprietor of millions, and a brown stone mansion.—Peck's Sun.

The bill restoring Fitz-John Porter to the rank he held in the regular Army before his dismissal twenty years ago, but without pay or compensation, has passed the Senate. It is to be hoped it will pass the House, but this is not so certain. Nothing really stands in its way but prejudice, which probably no argument or discussion would overcome. The case is one of the most remarkable on record, in that its history records the conversion of nearly every competent authority who has examined it from a strong conviction of guilt to a strong conviction of innocence. There is hardly anybody now of note who adheres to the decision of the first court-martial except General Logan, and his opinions on it are clearly mingled with, and can hardly be separated from, the recollections and traditions of the period of Porter's condemnation, when his treachery was one of the dogmas of all patriotic people. It is based, too, on an assumption of which the history of every war furnishes a score of refutations, that dissatisfaction with or contempt for a general makes a subordinate officer ready to betray the army and the cause. The fierce grumbler is one of the best known of military characters, but in most cases he is among the hardest fighters.—Nation.

One of the most popular conductors that ever ran a train out of Boston has the credit of the following bon mot: Not long since a special minister's ticket was handed him, to which he gave careful inspection, as his duty required. The passenger quite tartly remarked that it was unnecessary to be so very particular about his ticket. The conductor quickly replied, in his quiet and very courteous manner: "I am only looking to see where you are going, sir. I don't care to see in the morning papers, 'Another minister gone wrong!'"—Boston Traveller.

The Fall River Line will run next season the new steamer Pilgrim, which is expected to be the largest and finest of its kind, in alternation with the Bristol, which is now being thoroughly overhauled and repaired, and the Providence will be held as a spare boat. The new freight boat, City of Fall River, which is receiving the finishing touches, is expected to take her place on the line, with a carrying capacity of eighty carloads of freight. Her boilers, coal-bunkers, etc., are all below decks, so her main deck is clear for freight, and she is very high between decks, and is 274 feet long above all, with 42 1-2 feet beam. She will be one of the most commodious boats on the Sound.

Book Notices.

The Musical Herald for February contains a fine portrait of Ole Bull, and a continuation of the sketch of Handel by Geo. Oliver of Salem. The music of the number consists of an anthem "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel" by Bortnianisky. "Watchman, what of the Night" by Gounod, and a selection for a male Quartette "Perfect in Christ" by Jas. H. Howe. It contains much of interest to musical people. Price $1.50 per year. Published by Musical Herald Co., Boston.

We have received from Saalfield's Music Store, 12 Bible House, N. Y., and 16 Jackson Street, Chicago, an unpretentious, little work which speaks for itself. It is entitled "RICHARDS' NEW METHOD FOR THE PIANO FORTE," and the Publishers claim that anybody can learn to play the Piano without a teacher by buying a copy of the same. As specimens of what the whole book contains we mention pieces such as "In the Gloaming," "Baby's Empty Cradle," "Blue Alsatian Mountains," "Kathleen Mavourneen," "Old Oaken Bucket," "Nearer my God to Thee;" selections from operas such as "Carmen," "Patience," "Olivette," "Billee Taylor," "Mascotte," etc.: waltzes, such as "Racquet," "You and I," "Charming," etc., and to sum up, we know of no better book of its kind that has lately been published. All the music in it is good and taking. Sent postpaid by the Publishers on receipt of 75 cents.

The March number of Frank Leslies' presents several new and attractive features, and fully sustains the high character of this popular magazine. Rev. Dr. Porter contributes No. 3 of "Religious Denominations in the United States. The Reformed (Dutch) Church." The editor, T. DeWitt Talmage, has an interesting article, "The Blessings of Short Life.' The new serial story, "Justice Warren's Daughter" is continued, and "Weighed and Wanting" concluded; and there are other delightful short stories, essays, sketches, etc. The Home Pulpit has a sermon by Dr. Talmage, "Garrison Duty," and interesting features, "The Collection Basket," "Personal and Editorial Notes and Comments," etc., etc. The number is elaborately illustrated. Price, 25 cents a copy; $3 a year postpaid. Address, MRS. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55, and 57 Park Place, New York.

When a handsome young wife went to a hardware store to get one of those wooden contrivances to mash potatoes, and said, "I want a masher," every man in the shop, from the boss to the office boy, started up to wait on her. "Oh," she blushingly replied, "I want a potato masher; a cabbage head won't answer."

Anecdotes.

HOW HE PAYS HIS RENT.

Says the Paris American Register: In view of the close relations existing between the family of the Count of Rantzau and that of Prince-Bismarck it may not be uninteresting to allude to an ancient custom preserved to this day at the Rantzau manor. More than three centuries ago a certain Count Rantzau, while hunting and hotly pursuing a stag, lost his way and finally fell into one of those deep holes frequently met with on the Schleswig moors to this day. His cries for help were heard by an old peasant not far off, who hastened to the spot and succeeded in saving the Count's life. Refusing any recompense at first, he was in the end prevailed upon by the Count to accept some token of gratitude and asked to be made proprietor of the piece of moorland they were standing on. To this the Count gladly consented; on condition, however, that the peasant and his successors were to appear at the castle every year on St. Martin's Day to pay a tribute of one pfennig and to be the guest of the castle for that day. The moorland has long been converted into fertile fields, many successive generations of the Count's as well as of the old peasant have since gone to their last resting place, but the agreement then made is still in force, and the actual proprietor of the piece of land regularly pays his tribute of one silver pfennig, Danish currency, on every 10th day of November. There being, however, very few specimens of this ancient coin left, the piece itself is returned to the peasant on leaving the castle at night. At noon on the 10th of November last the present proprietor of the so-called "pfenning-meadow" put in his appearance at the Castle Breitenburg, near Itzehoe, where Count Rantzau, Prince Bismarck's son-in-law, surrounded by friends and officials, received the tribute, had an old fashioned receipt drawn up, and then conducted the peasant to the banquet, consisting of the like courses originally prescribed for the singular ceremony by its founder.

RUSSIAN COURAGE.

I should rather incline to think that mere courage is more general among Russians than among any other people nowadays. I mean the unreasoning, irresponsible readiness of a dog to risk life and liberty upon provocation. Not more volunteers rush out, when a desperate enterprise is mooted, than from our own ranks; more than all is a mathematical absurdity. But the Englishman stakes his life in another, a grander spirit. He feels, and reckons with, the peril. Before meeting it, so far as I have seen examples, he is quiet, thoughtful, contemplating the worst, and making his arrangements. A Russian scorns all that, does not even think of it. After assuring himself, rather roughly, that the needful dispositions have been made, he becomes the lightest-hearted of the company to which he hastens. I do not say affects to become, for it may well be that deadly danger stirs him to mirth, as it stirs another man, equally brave, to self-commune. I cannot forget an instance on Radisove Hill the morning of the great attack. An infantry regiment stood at ease in the rain, waiting the order to descend into the valley blind with smoke, echoing with thud of guns and angry crackle of musketry. The Colonel and a staff Captain approached and asked us to accept charge of letters for their wives to be forwarded in case of accident. Then they stood, chatting of London and Paris, with the warmth of men whose hearts were there, though the battle raged closer, and a ball now and then musically spun above our heads. They asked the precise story of a scandal half-forgotten now, and their shrewd comments told they were attending closely, when an aide came galloping through the mist. Three minutes afterward the doomed regiment filed away down toward the valley of death.—All the Year Round.

THE DIGESTION OF AN OSTRICH.

It has commonly been made to appear that ostriches are so stupid or so greedy as to be totally indiscriminate in the matter of food; but this is a mistake. When two kinds of food are placed before them they will prefer the one, and are notably fond of certain kinds, such as mealies and prickly pears. Many of them even show delicate choice. But a hungry bird will eat almost anything. His system requires food in large quantity, but he always prefers the suitable kinds. It is a fact, however, that the ostrich often dies of over-indulgence. On the farms birds also die by the score of apoplexy, brought on by their keepers stuffing them constantly with all they can eat. An incredible number of pebbles are sometimes found in an ostrich's stomach, where they serve the same purpose, in triturating the food, as sand in a pigeon's gizzard, Mr. Tillbrook, a farmer of the Graaf Reinet district, once found a carcass, the gizzard of which contained some nine hundred and thirty stones of sizes varying from that of a pea to that of a walnut. Most of them were bright and hard, and all more or less rounded by constant rubbing. We may see the reason of that instinct which prompts an ostrich to stretch his neck over the fence and pick off a gold stud or a diamond pin from the breast of the unsuspecting visitor, or in default of a jewel so attractive, to attempt to pull a button of his coat. —Century Magazine.

There have been many definitions of gentleman, but the prettiest and most poetic is that given by a lady. "A gentleman," says she, "is a human being combining a woman's tenderness with a man's courage."

We spend half our lives in making mistakes, and waste the remainder in thinking how we might have avoided them.

The road to success is paved with the skulls of misfortune.

Miscellaneous.

The republican state central committee have chosen Henry Cabot Lodge chairman and George A. Flagg, of Millbury, as secretary. The choice of Mr. Lodge we regard as a fortunate one. Those in this vicinity who met him during the last campaign were impressed with his earnestness and ability. He will be heard from, and in a manner which will result in good. The members for Essex County are, Henry Cabot Lodge, of Nahant; C. Warren Osborn, of Peabody; Wm. H. Tappan, of Manchester; E. H. Potter, of Rowley; Augustus Mudge, of Danvers; W. Fisk Gile, of Lawrence.

Webster, the lexicographer, defines Catarrh to be, "a discharge of fluid from the mucous membrane, especially of the nose, fauces, and the bronchial passages, caused by a cold in the head." It is a disease common alike to all classes of society. Unlike an ordinary cold, it cannot be cured by family remedies, but requires an antidote from the ranks of materia medica. The preparation so universally known under the name of Ely's Cream Balm is a sovereign, unfailing cure for Catarrh. It is a neat, pleasant, yet thoroughly efficacious remedy. "I have been troubled with Catarrh so badly," writes B. F. Leipsner, A. M. of Red Bank, N. J., "for several years that it seriously affected my voice. I tried various remedies without relief. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored and my head feels better than for years." 50 cents only.

Travel over the Narrow Guage road is remarkably heavy for this season of the year. Many becoming acquainted with the advantages of this line, during the recent reign of low rates, continue to patronize it.

The Fredrickton (New Brunswick, Can.) Reporter says: "Nobody can but admire the persistent enterprise manifested by the owners of St. Jacobs Oil in keeping the name before the public. It received a big 'send off' in the House the other day by the Hon. Mr. Perley, who warned his colleagues in the Government of the danger of Bear Killers receiving two bounties for one nose: the judicious use of the Oil causing rapid growth."

The Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn railroad company, are equipping their cars with new steel tired wheels which are much safer than ordinary ones and run with remarkable smoothness on the rails. They are to a great extent to obviate the jar incident to railroad travel.

Gentlemen who are growing gray will be glad to learn from a fashion paper that "the custom of inserting white hairs in dark fur has been abandoned." —Boston Commercial Bulletin.

It costs the New York legislature three dollars a day for prayers, and there are one or two members not converted yet.

The Swampscott station of the Eastern Railroad will be refurnished and the ticket office changed to the railroad side of the structure.

The Congregational year book for 1883 reports 927 churches with pastors, an increase of 50; 1,986 with acting pastors and 1,023 vacant: total 3,936; a gain of 81. This time the year book shows a small increase in membership, 1,934, the total number of church members being 387,619. The additions by profession were 13,539, an increase of 2,228. The number of Sunday school scholars is 454,578, an increase of 3,928.

All persons suffering from Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Loss of Voice or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, are requested to call at Spauldings Drug Store and get a trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, free of charge, which will convince them of its wonderful merits and show what a regular dollar-size bottle will do. Call early.

An important decision has been given in the Superior Criminal Court. John Tarbell was called for trial on a complaint for violating a by-law of the city of Boston, in that he exercised the calling of a peddler or hawker upon the public streets, without a license from the Board of Aldermen. Tarbell, who is a disabled soldier, had a State license. Judge Rockwell said he had always entertained views that the by-law or ordinance under which the pending complaint was made was illegal, and he, therefore, ordered the complaint to be dismissed. The ground of the decision is that the public at large has an easement in the public streets, and that municipalities cannot make by-laws giving one person a right to use the street and excluding another.

IMPORTANT TOTHE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

AND FOR

ONE OF THE NECESSITIES OF LIFE.

EVERY MAN AND BOY

who resides in the New England States requires an Overgarment. The Naumkeag Clothing Company having on the counters about (600) six hundred of these valuable garments WILL CLOSE OUT the lot at Retail for about ONE HALF their value. The garments are all cut, made and trimmed in the latest style and will be as fashionable for the Fall and Winter of 1883 as at the present time. Our reasons for closing out all our Overgarments at a large discount is, we require the room for Spring and Summer Clothing. With our enormous salesroom of nearly (7000) seven thousand square feet we find it inadequate to meet the demands of our increasing trade.

It has always been our custom after the busy season to give our customers a "benefit" by offering a Mark Down Sale of fine and medium Clothing, but the fine quality and low prices of our goods, at this sale will eclipse anything ever before offered by any establishment in New England.

This sale will not only include all our overcoats and ulsters, but a large lot of Men's, Young Men's, Boys' and Children's Suits, Pantaloons and Heavy Underwear.

Our Overcoats include the following styles, Cheviots, Elysian Beavers, Chinchillas, Moscon Beavers, Seal Brown, Black and Blue English and German Beavers, Seal Brown Kerseys, Plain and Fancy Mixed Cassimeres, Plain and Fancy Olive Greens and Oxford Mixtures.

We shall offer at this great sale three special bargains in Overcoats.

LOT NO. 1.

A large lot of Men's and Young Men's Plain and Fancy Mixed Cassimere, Melton Cheviot and fine Beaver Overcoats marked down from $20. and $22. to $15.

LOT NO. 2.

A lot of Men's extra fine English and German Beaver, Seal Brown Kersey, Olive Green and Brown Mixed Cassimere and Worsted Overcoats—some of them cut extra long—all marked down from $23. and $25. to a uniform price of $18.00.

LOT NO. 3.

A large lot of Men's and Young Men's Overcoats and Ulsterettes. This lot comprises thirteen different patterns—all handsome stylish garments—have been retailed all the season for $15.00, $16.50 and $18.00. We have consolidated the lots and marked them all at $10.00 each—a bargain unparalleled.

We have also a lot of Men's Overcoats, prices ranging from $2.00 to $8.00.

One lot of men's heavy fine all wool ulsters marked down from $25. and $22. to $15.00

One lot of 50 ulsters prices ranging from $4.50 to $10.00.

Boys' and Children's Clothing at a TREMENDOUS DISCOUNT.

Continuation of the great mark down sale of Heavy Underwear. Heavy Undershirts and Drawers 25c, 35c, 50c, and 75c and $1.00

Men's Cardigan Jackets marked down to 62c, 87c and $1.00—a great bargain.

Men's Unlaundered Shirts, linen bosoms, marked down to 38, 45, 69 and 92 cts. each, the greatest bargain ever offered in Unlaundered Shirts.

COMPOUND PEPSIN TONIC

Compound essence of pepsin. A remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion as shown in loss of appetite, nausea, sense of fullness or weight in the stomach, water-brash, and a sense of fluttering or sinking at the pit of the stomach. Dose, one tablespoonful (for adults) before meals.

Dyspepsia or indigestion is very prevalent in this country owing to habits of living—especially of eating and drinking. There is a disagreeable sensation in the stomach, although there may be no pain. When there is pain it is located in the breast, giving rise to fears of lung disease. There is a slight nausea; the mouth is clammy, or has a sour, bitter taste; the complexion is sallow, the bowels are costive, and there may be heartburn, water brash, flatulence, palpitation of the heart (causing fear of heart disease), headache or double sight. The disease may be caused by either too much or too little exercise, too severe application of the mind, excessive emotion, intemperance in alcoholic drinks, tobacco, tea or coffee, too warm and too rich food, ice water, excessive use of medicine, etc. For sale by

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

THERE ARE TWO things which will be brought to the consideration of the town at the annual meeting, among others, which ought to receive a favorable hearing. One is the extension of the privileges of high service water to our neighbors in So. Peabody, and the other is the establishment of a fire alarm system.

No one at this time disputes the advantage to our town of the new system of water works. From the time of the turning on of the high pressure until now, it has been growing in favor. The water is good, the pressure is sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and it has proved an invaluable aid to our firemen in time of conflagration. These privileges, of so much advantage to us, are to be asked for the benefit of So. Peabody. If they have been an aid to us, they will be equally so to them. There is a large future before this portion of the town. The opening of the horse railroad will develop unknown possibilities, and we believe So. Peabody is destined to become a thriving and busy portion of our town, far beyond even the anticipations of those who are among the most ardent advocates of the horse railroad to Lynn. We doubt not the town will see it to be of advantage that the water pipes shall be extended there.

The necessity of some better system of fire alarm has been demonstrated at every fire during the past year. We all know that the first few minutes of a fire are the most valuable; that the loss of several minutes at the outset in discovering the location of a fire, is a loss, many times incalculable, in the destruction of property. At present there is no method of giving an alarm. If a fireman responds to one, he gives the bell on his engine house a few pulls, and is off with the engine or truck to the fire. He is not to wait, nor is it his duty to ring the bell. His place is at the fire, and many times our citizens think a fire is out, when it really has just begun, because the bell on the engine house has ceased to ring. The system of alarm advocated last year would remedy all this. When the alarm is pulled in, the location can be determined at once, not only by the firemen, but by every citizen in town, within hearing of the bell on which the alarm is struck. We hope our citizens will look into the merits of this system. The more it is examined, the more are its advantages seen. It is by all means the only sure alarm.

There is another matter, to which reference was made sometime since, which we hope will receive encouragement at the annual meeting. It is that a small appropriation be made by the town to the fire department for a parade and supper similar to that which was served at Upton's Hall, where all of the fire department and many of our citizens were present. The reciprocal feeling, originating there, was one of the causes of the formation of the Relief Association, which is destined to be of great value at some time to the disabled firemen. Such a meeting, and such a parade as we have suggested, would be an event to the firemen. The expense need not be large but they should have an opportunity once a year to exchange views, and meet each other and others of our citizens in their united capacity as firemen of the town.

GEN. BUTLER has given the state a sensation in the summary dismissal of Warden Earle, of the State Prison. It is an act which should not have been done without due deliberation; and inasmuch as the approval of the executive council was assured, it is fair to presume that it was not done for political reasons. At the first glance, it would seem as if the action of the governor was hasty, in not giving the warden an opportunity to reply to the charges made against him. Two things are possible, either his removal was intended to be accomplished at all events, or the governor and council are in possession of facts which preclude the possibility of any satisfactory reply. In either case, it is to be remembered that Gov. Butler is the servant of the people, and that any action which he might feel at liberty to take must not do injustice to warden Earle, especially if he holds himself in readiness to answer any charges of incapacity which may be brought against him.

Whatever may be thought of the removal, there can be but one opinion as to the expediency of allowing the prisoners to send sealed letters to the Governor. To command warden Earle to announce such permission before all the prisoners, could hardly be construed otherwise by the convicts than that the governor invited their complaints. It is not strange that letters charging cruelty on the warden's part, were sent.

But it is strange if Gen. Butler and the council allowed themselves to be governed by them in the removal of Earle. It could not be expected that the convicts who had been punished—and we cannot suppose such an event to be avoided—would be otherwise than hostile to the warden. It is natural. But for the governor to take sides against authority, as he certainly has the appearance of doing, cannot but be subversive of discipline. It is hard to believe that Butler, as good a lawyer as he is, has allowed himself to be governed by the vagaries of the convicts. The public have a right to be informed more particularly as to the reasons for the action; if just, they will merit the approval of all good citizens. Under the circumstances, however, the position of warden Earle's successor will be a difficult one to fill.

GOVERNOR BUTLER has prepared a copy of a bill which he has presented to the judiciary committee, embodying what are presumed to be his desires. If the bill is brought before the legislature, it will be very quickly disposed of. The people of Massachusetts are not yet ready, we trust, to delegate to the governor, be he Butler or any one else, such unlimited power as would be granted by the passage of such an act. The text of the bill is as follows:

Section 1. That, in addition to the powers now conferred upon the governor and council, or either of them, the governor and council, either by themselves or by a committee, shall have jurisdiction to enquire into and investigate the conduct of all executive officers established by law or appointed to any place in this commonwealth except legislative officers; or into the condition and management of any institution supported in whole or in part by the state; and, in the exercise of such jurisdiction, shall have all the powers respectively of a court of law as to the production and taking of testimony, and requiring obedience to their process.

Section 2. If, for the purposes of such investigation and inquiry, it shall be deemed necessary for the efficiency thereof to suspend any officer, not judicial or legislative, temporarily from his duties, such suspension shall be made by the governor and the duties devolve upon any other officer, for a period not exceeding 30 days unless the period of suspension shall be made by the governor, with the advice of the council; or the officer shall be removed and his successor appointed by the governor, by and with the advice of the council.

Section 4. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

THE ANNUAL hearings at the State house on the liquor question and woman suffrage have begun. Apropos of the former, much interest is noted in an article published by the Christian Union, being a reply by six leading men of the country to questions propounded by that paper, as to the wisdom of the prohibitory law. Strange to say, there was a hearty unaniminity in their replies, and they all agreed that it was useless to attempt the enforcement of a law which was in advance of public sentiment. In their judgment more attention should be given to the moral aspect of the question until public opinion would uphold a prohibitory law. Among the gentlemen was John D. Long, who has been considered by the temperance people a friend and advocate of prohibition.

In regard to the woman suffrage question, interest is added to the hearings this year by a petition opposing it, signed by women themselves. As we have before intimated, much work has got to be done by the women themselves before any progress can be made. It is not yet clear that such suffrage is desired by them. On the contrary there is good reason for supposing that its advocates are a minority of the sex. A bill was reported by the committee on Monday in favor of granting suffrage to women in this State. A minority report is also submitted by two members. The bill as we understand it is a restricted one, leaving it entirely with the women themselves to avail themselves of the privilege. That a small proportion of the sex would so avail themselves has been clearly shown by the experiment of voting for members of School Committee.

HON. MARSHALL JEWELL, well known as the chairman of the Republican National Committee, died at Hartford, Conn., Saturday night, of pneumonia. He was a man of great force of character and well fitted for the position which he held. His first political office was in 1868, when he was chosen Governor of Connecticut. In 1873 he was sent by President Grant to the court of St. Petersburg, was re-called the following year and appointed Postmaster General. The postal treaty with Canada was completed during his administration, as well as other reforms. In 1880 he was chosen Chairman of the National Committee. The Boston Advertiser well says of him: He owed much to a distinguished appearance and popular manners. In the public offices which he held he conducted himself with discretion and tact, if not with signal ability and brilliancy. He had an extensive acquaintance with the politicians and business men of the country, and has been very popular, especially with the people of Connecticut. For many years past he has been a notable figure in politics, and his services to the republican party are worthy of remembrance.

THE LEGITIMATE drama has met with a great loss, in the death of Charles R. Thorne, Jr. He came from a dramatic family. His father and mother were both renowned on the stage, and Mr. Thorne when a young man. was in the ranks at the foot of the ladder. After varying success in minor parts he won his first triumphs as leading man in the Boston Theatre, appearing Aug. 27, 1866 as Raphael in the "Marble Heart." He is best known from his connection with the Union Square Theatre in New York. Few of our readers will forget him, who have visited this theatre, and seen his wonderful impersonations in "The Banker's Daughter," in the "Danicheffs," or the other great successes of that splendid stock company. He has appeared several times with that company in the Park Theatre in Boston, and his final appearance there was in May last when he recited "Sheridan's ride," with thrilling effect.

THE BILL of Gen. Logan for the transfer of the signal service from the war department 'o the interior, where it belongs, has provoked the opposition of Hazen, the nominal head of the service. But the transfer should be made. What has the army to do with the weather reports? As it is, this department has been brought into disrepute of late since the death of Gen. Meyer. The value of these reports is inestimable; and the improvement of the service from year to year, as new scientific facts are discovered, should be an object to be attained. It does not appear that the present head of this bureau is anything but a figure head, the work being all done by his subordinates. If the transfer will work a reform, the country will suffer no harm.

Our friend, James M. Caller, of Salem, suggests the establishment of a bureau at the national capital, which shall furnish daily reports of the market. As thus:

STOCK BUREAU, WASHINGTON D.C.

Indications for the New York market: Lower confidence. A greater pressure to sell under a decline; local bull points prevail, veering to bear, with lower temperature and signs of freezing out; a bad day to get left. Cautionary signals from D. & R. G. to Lake Shore. A boom in telephone is developing in the vicinity of Boston.

SPECIAL BULLETIN.

Water in Wabash rising, and pools all full; banks weak, with danger that they may give way under the strain. Local troubles in North-west on account of snow. A storm center has developed in the region of the Rocky Mountains, and is working east over the U. P., D. & R. G. and the C., B. & Q. The local temperature is Keene, and a Gould wave is approaching from the South-west. General distrust and suspicion prevail in Tennessee and Alabama, where a storm of great energy is central. The financial temperature at these points is many degrees below the mean, and is still falling. In New York and the Eastern States manipulation runs high, with buying shifting to selling movements.

To those people who believe that the Government should exercise a paternal control over all the affairs of citizens, this project will, no doubt, commend itself as one replete with wisdom and efficacy.—S. & Leather Reporter.

MR. JOHN P. PEABODY comes to the front as usual with a special sale. His announcement this week cannot fail to interest our lady readers, and a visit to his store will be a greater surprise than the reading of his advertisement. Mr. Peabody knows the wants of his patrons, and his facilities for obtaining his goods at first hand enables him to sell at much lower prices than other dealers.

South Peabody.

In his second anniversary sermon February 4th, at South Peabody, Rev. Mr. Colwell, in referring to the efforts put forth by his people in behalf of the Temperance Cause, spoke as follows:—"I have lectured once here, and once in West Peabody, on the subject 'Who is responsible for the Crime of Intemperance.' The lecture here was delivered the evening before Town Meeting. I think that the history of the year past has proved what I then said relative to the nonsensical wickedness of a license law. The license law was adopted by vote of the town, and we have had practically 'free rum' ever since; for there are somewhere in the neighborhood of fifty license 'gin mills' I believe, within our borders. You will find them on the 'Square,' on Main St., along Foster St., in 'Dublin,' here in our midst, in fact, almost everywhere. Talk about a license law restricting the evils of intemperance! Such a statute may limit the number of those who sell; but what matter, so long as those who are permitted to sell keep a supply sufficient to meet the demand. You cannot thus do away with evil, by substituting one form of evil for another. It would be greater comfort surely to know that an army of invaders were to be kept from crossing our borders, on the condition that we had granted a regiment or two the privilege of coming in among us to hack, shoot, burn, and kill as they pleased. Well! the destroyer is among us, and he is backed by the authority of those who have voted to allow him to ply his wicked work here; and in his whiskey-hell, he gathers our laboring men, with their hard-earned wages, and our youth; not only to fleece them of their gains, to take from them that which should go to make themselves and their families comfortable, but to inflict on them also, a 'bitter, blinding, damning curse'—the ruination of their bodies and their souls. Oh! shame, that this evil should be allowed to flourish among us! Shame, that for political or business interests, any one should, for an instant, tolerate it!"

Nearly eighty people, representing Salem, Beverly, Lynn, East Boston, Chelsea and this town gathered last week Tuesday evening at the house of Mrs. Rebecca E. Richardson, the occasion being the 91st anniversary of the hostess' birthday. An enjoyable time was had. Early in the evening the company gathered together and after fitting remarks, Scripture reading, and singing, young and old betook themselves to different parts of the old mansion, to enjoy themselves socially. A bountiful old time repast was spread in the ample kitchen which was both appetizing and satisfying. At a late hour, the company dispersed to their homes, leaving with their gifts—among which was a large rocking chair—hearty congratulations and best wishes. Mrs. Richardson although in the last decade of a century is still quite healthful and strong. Her intellect is clear and her memory retentive, and she is as interested in passing events as one in full vigor of life. It is good to have among us such an example of serene old age. May her days still be lengthened out and may they prove to be her best days.

They have got a hen at the Alms house that is perfectly willing to do her share to help out the Poor Department during the long cold winter. This is shown by her laying an egg which measured 8 1-2 x 6 inches and weighed about half a pound.

About 200 people were present at the concert given by Miss Nellie Miles. A goodly sum was netted.

Mr. Geo. Richardson has leased the Gilman place on Lynn St., and intends to carry on the hen business.

Edward E. Taylor has had two bad ill turns this week.

Messrs. Hawks & Phillips have had their four horse team rolling the snow between County St., and the ice house for trotting. A large number of trotters are present every afternoon.

Rev. Mr. Lamb, formerly pastor of the So. Peabody Society, was in town yesterday.

Mr. Luther Larrabee, 137 Boston street, Wyoma, has a large grey owl of the Hood species, that was captured in the woods. This is a very valuable and rare bird for this vicinity. It has laid an egg since its capture.

WEST PEABODY.—Surprise to Mr. Bowman Viles: A member of the Farmers' Club wishing to "drop in" on Mr. V. at some convenient opportunity, "sounded" among some of the leading members upon the subject of a surprise and found it took to the letter. To accomplish the desired purpose in view, some necessary funds were wanted, to which nearly all the members of the Club, and a few outsiders, "chipped in," and a very neat little sum of money was collected; then came the query as to what to purchase with said amount of cash; on learning that Mr. Viles is frequently called upon to help in many musical entertainments, as he is a fine player on the violin, and that he had been seen to take his instrument away from home without being in a case, it was decided upon to buy a violin box, and finding nearly cash enough left to buy a good leather covered gent's reclining arm chair, the articles were both bought. Then came the time, and the word to go was decided upon for Wednesday evening, Feb. 7th. The evening was fine, and the number about eighty were present. The readers can imagine whether or not the host was surprised. The articles were taken in and presented to Mr. Viles with a few remarks, to which Mr. V. responded as well as he could under the circumstances; and wishing to extend his thanks more fully to the many friends present, a bountiful supper was partaken of. After which, there was vocal and instrumental music, and a general exchange of social congratulations upon the success of the occasion, and all departed for their homes at a seasonable hour feeling well paid for the part they had performed in the "carryings on." The hostess had been informed of what was to be, and she, always ready for a good joke, kept the secret. Although several surprise parties, as they are called, have been given in West Peabody and vicinity this winter, only the select are invited, and nothing indulged in, in anything of a fandango nature, the entire motives being to increase the neighborhood sociability and acquaintance, which, if left out, or prohibited, what would be left in a civilized community worth living for?

Last Friday night the West Peabody Farmers' Club assembled at West Peabody Hall, to listen to an essay written and delivered by Benjamin P. Ware, on "Ensilage." The meeting opened with instrumental and vocal music. Before Mr. Ware commenced, J. S. Needham and Rev. Willard Spaulding made some very flattering remarks in behalf of Mr. Ware's good qualities, saying they hoped he would be nominated and elected as our next member of Congress. On motion of Mr. Needham, Mr. Ware received three rousing cheers. Mr. Ware responded very feelingly, saying the remarks were a perfect surprise to him, but said whatever position he was called to fill he would do it faithfully and honorably. Mr. Ware commenced his essay by giving an account of the times ensilage was first used for food in foreign lands and traced it down to the present time. Mr. Ware gave his practical experience in raising corn and rye for ensilage; building of Silos and much general information that was very beneficial to a Farmers' Club. Mr. J. G. Walcott and Rev. Willard Spaulding made some lengthy remarks, saying that corn in their judgment was the best crop a farmer could raise for profit when keeping a stock of cows. The meeting was kept up to a late hour and was full of interest, closing with song from Chorus Club. Mr. Ansel Putnam of Danvers, lectures next Friday night.

A. C. Legro of West Peabody drew a whip at the Red Men's fair at Danvers recently.

Arrangements are being made for a very pleasant time at West Peabody hall next Wednesday evening. The ladies connected with the society here will give a fair and festival. An entertainment consisting of vocal and instrumental music will be given by the Chorus Club, which will be interspersed with select readings, etc. A "mute" supper will be given, previous to which an original poem will be read. The fancy articles will be for sale. The object is a worthy one as the ladies wish to assist in paying their pastor's salary.

The undersigned hereby extends his thanks to E. C. Farwell, B. H. Taylor and other members of the West Peabody Farmers' Club, who on the night of Feb. 7, so agreeably surprised him with their social company and the beautiful presents brought with them as tokens of respect to him for services rendered as musical director of the club. And he would further say that if his services have been instrumental in enlivening the meetings with music, may they be more so in the future. He again extends his sincere thanks for their kind tokens of respect tendered him, and also to the ladies for the bountiful collation they provided for all present. BOWMAN VILES.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Peabody's Babies: The returns of births which occurred in this town during the year 1882 have been collected by Town Clerk Poor and will be forwarded to the State authorities. They contain some interesting details respecting the growth of our population from this source. The whole number for the year is 250, which is 62 more than the number of deaths. It was emphatically a girls' year, there being 132 female babies against 118 males, a rate which, if continued, would greatly increase the already large female majority in Massachusetts. The number for each month did not vary so much as in some past years, though July had rather more than its share. The following shows the number of arrivals in the different months: January 14, February 23, March 23, April 20, May 21, June 17, July 28, August 17, September 15, October 26, November 24, December 22. There was one pair of twins, one a male and the other a female. There were three illegitimate births, one male and two females. Forty-eight of these new comers had fathers who were born in Peabody, and in thirty-five cases the mothers were born in Peabody. There were 81 with straight American parents on both sides. There were 105 fathers born in Ireland and 115 mothers born in the same country, while there was also a lesser number of foreign born parents representing quite a number of nationalities. Of course the leather interest is most largely represented among the parents, 63 fathers being engaged in currying, besides tanners, morocco finishers, etc. There is also a clergyman and the usual variety of other callings represented except an editor.

The sudden death of Miss Hattie E. Stanley, which occurred last Saturday noon, was a surprise to our entire community. Miss Stanley had been to Salem in the forenoon, returning just before twelve o'clock, when she was taken with a violent attack of vomiting. During her illness her brother came to his dinner, and being called to Boston, and the symptoms being of a nature similar to previous attacks, he hastily partook of his meal and left the house. After his departure she grew worse and Dr. Worcester was summoned, reaching the house but a few minutes before she died. Miss Stanley was the daughter of the late Miles O. Stanley who died some years ago. The death of Mrs. Stanley followed, since which time Miss Hattie and her brother Frank has occupied the house on Washington St. She was a lady of many estimable qualities, doing much good in a quiet way, and finding her greatest pleasure in devoting herself to the happiness of a large circle of friends, who will deeply mourn her loss. Miss Stanley was a graduate of the Peaboby High School, was a constant attendant at the Unitarian church, and a member of the Unity Club. Her brother Frank W. Stanley is the only surviving member of the family, and he will have the sympathy of our entire people in his affliction. Her funeral took place Monday afternoon from her late residence, the services being conducted by Rev. Mr. Hudson. Her age was thirty-seven years.

By a reporter of the Woonsocket Reporter, the following personal appeared in that paper after the banquet of the Massachusetts Press Association, and it is fair to believe refers to a Peabody young lady: "Quite in keeping with the surroundings were the elegant toilets of the ladies, diamonds sparkling everywhere, as if trying to outdazzle the flashing eyes of the fair wearers. Even our sedate, but truly good friend, M'Glenen of the Boston Theatre, occasionally turned his eyes from the culinary attractions of the ACME of grace and beauty as reflected in Miss H-w-d. President Procter presided with dignity, and what with the wit of the Hon. N. A. Horton, the thoughtful suggestions of Hon. C. W. Slack, the counsel of Justin Jones, Esq., and the smiling approval of J. K. Tarbox, M. C., an hour was profitably passed."

Last Thursday evening Prof. Fillebrown of Salem appeared at Upton's Hall under the anspices of the Benevolent So. There was a large attendance and the tricks performed by the Professor were very clever and deceptive. After an hour had been spent in this way the company adjourned to the dining hall below where ice cream, cake and coffee were offered for sale. After this Prof. Fillebrown performed some of his most difficult tricks of legerdemain much to the satisfaction of all present. The affair was a success socially and must have been financially.

Three weeks from last Monday is the day when a choice of town officers will be made, and it is also rumored that town meeting orators are getting their little speeches ready.

"G. S." Cigars—all the rage—nothing like them—at George Stevens'.

We are seldom called upon to chronicle the cures effected by any patent medicine, but the following was recently told us by the lady in question and we can vouch for its truth. The lady who till recently resided on Central street in this town, had for more than ten years suffered with a pain in her back which at times was very severe. One morning as she was leaving the house she slipped and fell striking her back on a stone step. She was assisted to the house and was in great pain, and it was feared serious injury had been done her back. A doctor was called, and in a sarcastic way remarked that he should supposed she would have sent for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil instead of him. However he left a prescription and departed. The patient wondered what St. Jacobs Oil was, had her curiosity aroused and sent her husband for a bottle. This was used instead of what the doctor ordered, and before she had used one bottle, she experienced great relief and by a continual use of it for a few months she has fully recovered, and now for the first time for years she is without any pain in her back whatever.

The Winter Session of the Essex Liberal Conference will occur at the North Church, Salem, Feb. 22, 1883. A religious service, to be conducted by Rev. J. W. Hudson, will occupy the morning hour from half past nine. After half past ten, addresses may be expected from Rev. Grindall Reynolds, Sec'y. A. U. A., on the needs and purposes of the Association, and from Miss M. S. Devereux, on the "Marshfield Church," with such other communications as the Woman's Auxiliary Conference may desire to make, and an essay by Rev. Edward H. Hall, of Cambridge. In the afternoon, a Colloquy will be conducted by Rev. Messrs. McDaniel, Israel, Stewart, Morehouse and others, on "A Liberal Religion plus the Liberal Theology."

Archelaus P. Coffrain, who died recently in Salem, was born in Beverly. His mother was a Putnam, and a sister to Mrs. Major Black. When a young man he learned the trade of a shoemaker of his brother Joseph, in a shop that stood about where the residence of W. and M. Black now stand in Danversport. As he grew older he wanted to travel. About forty-five years ago he came to Peabody, then South Danvers, and worked for his brother Henry, at the morocco business, and later worked for Wm. P. Clark, Poole & Jacobs, and others.

Rev. C. H. Salsman died at Lebanon, Ohio, last Wednesday. Mr. S. was formerly a resident of this town and received his education with the assistance of the Baptist church here. He was a very estimable young man and his friends here will be pained to learn of his early death. The place at which he died was his first settlement, and it is supposed the climate did not agree with him, as he was thinking of giving up his church on account of ill health. His remains were taken to the home of his wife at Lisbon Falls, Me. Rev. C. V. Hanson officiated at his funeral.

Was he a crank? Last Saturday evening as quite a large party of coasters were enjoying that sport on Oak St., a man with a blue coat and brass buttons and blue cap made his appearance among them and forbade their coasting, saying that he was a deputy sheriff. He took the names of all he could obtain, and threatened them with arrest and divers awful punishments. Though the arrests and punishment have not come and the danger of their coming is not very imminent, the boys are anxious to know who the official was.

The carpenters, car on the side track of the E. R. R. below the station attracts considerable attention. This car is furnished by the railroad company and supplied with a cook by them. In this car the carpenters live while at work in any town. It is fitted with cooking utensils, bunks, etc. The men each contribute their share of the expense of living. It is said that in this way their expenses for board an only about three dollars a week.

The chief of the secret service in Washington has received from New York a photographic counterfeit $5 United States note, series of 1875, check A. The note has a dark blurred appearance. A counterfeit $5 note of the same series, and printed by the same process, but with the check letter D, has been on the market for two years. This is the first counterfeit note with the check letter A yet discovered.

The ladies of the Baptist Society will have a sociable and supper in the vestry of their church on Thursday (tomorrow) evening. Clam chowder, ice cream, cake, and coffee will be served. The ladies of this society have been holding these sociables once a month during the winter, and have netted quite a nice little sum. They invite as many of their friends as can make it convenient to come, assuring them of a good supper and a good time.

Mr. A. L. Ames, after spending a few days in town, returned to Kansas City to look after his new business there.

A short time since, Mr. George W. Pepper put in a new kind of a telephone, to be used between his house and manufactory, and to-day another has been placed in operation between the residence of W. C. Munroe on Elm street, and his freight office on Mill street. This is what is known as Frazer's Telephone, Mr. Edward J. Frazer of Farmington, Me., being the inventor. It consists of a small drum head transmitter with a sounding board in the rear, while the sound is carried on a common copper wire, suspended by a tarred rope. It is designed for short distances, many in use being half a mile in length. The longest distance at which one has been used is two miles. So successfully did the one at Mr. Munroe's work that the ticking of a clock held by the transmitters at his house could be distinctly heard in the office. They are so simple they never get out of order, while the cost is only a trifle. There is no doubt they will soon come into general use.

Some genius has started another puzzle, something like the "fifteen puzzle" which raged a few years ago. It consists of arranging nine letters so as to form a square, with three letters on each side, and the letters so arranged must form eight different and distinct English words. The combinations must be made from top to bottom, vertically, left to right, horizontally, and diagonally. The letters used are p, l, o, c, i, a, d, y, r.

We regret to announce the sudden decease of Mrs. Thomas S. Smith, which took place Monday noon of this week, of Bright's disease. Mrs. Smith was a daughter of Richard Kimball, and was a lady loved and respected by a large circle of friends. She leaves a son about three weeks old. Her age was 33 years. Funeral services occurred this afternoon at her late residence, Rev. Dr. Steele officiating.

The Liberal Club, which meets again in Kinsman Hall, Salem, on Feb. 20, has hit upon a decidedly novel entertainment. Three or four ten-minute essays on music will be read by ministers and laymen. Dr. Dudley will argue in favor of the quartette choir, illustrated by a choir, and Mr. Agge, with the assistance of a chorus, will present and illustrate the side of choral music.

The absence of the familiar form of our leading hardware dealer from our streets the past few days has been noted by many of our citizens. A glance at our matrimonial columns explains it. Mr. Trask was united in marriage in Skowhegan, Maine, to Miss Clara E. Webb of that place, yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. Trask have the best wishes of the PRESS for their future happiness.

The Lawrence Eagle says: Gen. Sutton of North Andover, has recently received a genuine surprise in ascertaining that he is the proprietor of the oldest woolen mill in this country. He learned this fact from a government agent, who had been sent to North Andover to gather statistics pertaining to manufacturing interests. It was built about 1800, and is small.

A benefit will be tendered Miss Minnie K. Felt, the contralto of the Unitarian church of this town, by the Barton Square Reading club, of Salem, the choir of which church she is also a member. The entertainment will be in the chapel, and will receive the encouragement of many of her friends here. It will occur next Tuesday evening.

Our neighbor's editorial last week contained the following:—"ever ready at the convening of the Legislature to smite independent action of soncranrious conviction." "Soncranrious" is good. That word ought to be preserved by some process for use during the winter. We are having a hard winter and such a word as that will come in handy.

Orders have just been sent out from the Post Office Department that on all kinds of mail matter, except letters, postage must be paid for forwarding, when the person addressed has left the place to which the matter is mailed. Newspapers, however, may be forwarded from one office to another in the county where they are published.

The little shop that has protected so many faithful employes of the Eastern Railroad Company on Central St. lately occupied by Mrs. Chas. Benjamin, the flag-man, and his family of feline friends was torn down last Saturday afternoon. A new one located on the other side of the street now serves a similar purpose.

To-day is St. Valentine's Day and it is expected there will take place a rushing exchange of hearts and darts, cupids and cooing doves, vows in verses and poesy without end. The day is generally one of extreme interest to young people of tender and impressible natures, but a tough one on postmasters and their clerks.

The United States stamped envelope works, Hartford, shipped 35,590,000 envelopes and newspaper wrappers during January, nearly 3,000,000 more than during any month since the opening of the works in that city.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex, ss. Probate Court.

To the Heirs at-law, Next of Kin and all other Persons interested in the Estate of GEORGE UPTON, late of Peabody, in said county, glue-manufacturer, deceased,

GREETING:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said Court for Probate, by Marian C. Upton and Henry Wardwell, who pray that letters testamentary may be issued to them, two of the executors therein named, and that they may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on their bond for the reasons alleged in said petition, (the other executor therein being under the age of twenty-one years). You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the third Monday of February next, at nine o'clock, before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioners are hereby directed to give public notice thereof by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper, called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirtieth day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

CURIOUS PATENTS.

Some investigating person has furnished the New York Times with a brief list of patents on small things which in many instances have proved great mines of wealth to the lucky discoverer. The list might be extended to a much larger number, but we only state those given in the Times. Among these trifles is the favorite toy—the "return ball"—a wooden ball with an elastic string attached, selling for ten cents each, but yielding to its patentee an income equal to fifty thousand dollars a year. The rubber tip on the end of lead pencils affords the owner of the royalty an independent fortune. The inventor of the gummed newspaper wrapper is also a rich man. The gimlet pointed screw has evolved more wealth than most silver mines, and the man who first thought of putting copper tips to children's shoes is as well off as if his father had left him two million dollars in United States bonds. Although roller skates are not so much used in countries where ice is abundant, in South America, especially in Brazil, they are very highly esteemed, and have yielded over one million dollars to their inventor. But he had to spend fully one hundred and twenty thousand dollars in England alone fighting infringements. The "dancing Jim Crow," a toy, provides an annual income of seventy-five thousand dollars to its inventor, and the common needle threader is worth ten thousand dollars a year to the man who thought of it. The "drive well" was an idea of Colonel Green, whose troops, during the war, were in want of water. He conceived the notion of driving a two-inch tube into the ground until water was reached and then attaching a pump. This simple contrivance was patented after the war, and tens of thousands of farmers who have adopted it have been obliged to pay him a royalty, a moderate estimate of which is placed at three million dollars. The spring window shade yields an income of one hundred thousand dollars a year; the stylographic pen also brings in one hundred thousand dollars yearly; the marking pen for shading in different colors, one hundred thousand dollars; rubber stamps the same. A very large fortune has been reaped by a western miner, who, ten years since, invented a metal rivet or eyelet in each end of the mouth of coat and pants pockets to resist the strain caused by the carriage of pieces of ore and heavy tools.

TOO BIG A START.

Colonel Percy Yerger, although a kind husband, a leading member of the church, a patriotic citizen and otherwise a high-toned Austin gentleman of culture and refinement, is, nevertheless, not in the habit of meeting promptly his pecuniary obligations. He owes everybody, including Sam Johnsing, his colored carriage driver, to which trusty Jehu he owes a year's back wages. Of late Colonel Yerger has been exhibiting no uneasiness whatever about the matter, much to the mental disquietude of the faithful African.

"Boss, I tenders a vacancy in my department," exclaimed Sam yesterday, having screwed his courage up to the sticking point.

"Why, Sam, what is it that perturbs you so much?"

"I'se 'turbed, boss, bekase I'se a short-ended neggah. My lungses is defected."

"Judging from the way you shout at some things, I should infer your organs of respiration and articulation were in a perfectly normal condition."

"I reckon dey is, boss, ef you say so, but I'se a short-winded niggah, all de same. I can't run wuff a cent."

"What occasion have you to indulge in such violent pedestrian exercise?" asked Colonel Yerger, with his usual suavity.

"Boss, does yer disremember me asking yer when yer was gwine to pay me my back wages, and ye tole me my wages was running on all right?"

"Yes, Sam, your pay is running on yet. There is no occasion for apprehension."

"Jess so, boss, but I'se a short-winded niggah, an' my wages has got such a big start ob me in de race dat I feel it in my bones dat sich a short-winded niggah will nebber be able to ketch up. Dem dar wages am bound to keep ahead ob me, so I tenders my vacancy in my department."—Texas Siftings.

A PARADISE FOR SPORTSMEN.

A letter from Lincoln, Neb., says that region has no equal as a shooting ground for ducks and geese. The number of geese can only be estimated by "land or square measure," by the acre or by the mile—millions and millions and millions. At daylight they sally out to the adjoining cornfields after food, flying in flocks of all sizes, from three to a hundred, and while some feed near the river others go further on, until an area of 20 or 30 miles on either side of the Platte is covered with them. Sportsmen secrete themselves on the banks of the streams at daylight, and shoot into the flocks as they fly out, then, taking their teams, hasten into the fields among the standing corn (the corn is never cut there as it is in the East), where an indiscriminate fire is kept up until about 9 o'clock, when the geese begin to fly toward the Platte, where they spend the day on the sand bars, out of the reach of shotguns. At this juncture the hunters hasten back to the banks of the river and again ambush themselves and shoot at the returning flocks. Late in the afternoon the geese make a second visit to the cornfields, when the above process may be repeated.

IN WHAT WAY A PREVALENT EVIL MAY BE SHORN OF ITS POWER TO HARM.

Malaria is a broad name for many diseases—all originating in blood poisoning. Bilious fever, the typhus and typhoid fevers and chills and fever are prominent members of the family. Malaria defies alike the builders, the plumbers and the physicians. Despairing of ordinary treatment, the latter almost unanimously recommend BENSON'S CALCINE POROUS PLASTER as the greatest anti-malarial specific of the age. These plasters act upon the liver, spleen, bowels and kidneys. Worn over the region of the liver, and upon the back over the kidneys, they ward off malaria like an armor. No other plasters do this.

When you purchase, satisfy yourself that the word CAPCINE is cut in the center of the plaster.

GIRLS WHO TRAVEL.

When a woman who is going on a journey has a man with her, she has a protector, and travels, not only with safety, but with a sense of duty as well.

Women who are compelled to take journeys alone, however, though they are not molested as a rule, do not always even when put in charge of the guard, feel free from a timidity and distrust which is the reverse of pleasant, and which makes impossible any feeling of delight at change of scene.

Carriages are occasionally found in trains "for ladies only;" but this is only seldom. Even, however, where they are labelled, they are not always kept for the specified purpose, and the masculine animal is as often as not introduced.

Men who have young daughters or sisters to send long distances often feel sorely in need of some carriage in which, once seated, girls would be guaranteed against intrusion.

Wives and matrons may be supposed to have some knowledge of the world, and to be able to protect themselves against impertinence; but inexperienced maidens demand some kind of outside aid.

Society, as a rule, is not so pure as it used to be. Creatures wearing coats, and who are models of propriety at home, sometimes forget, taken away from their usual associations, that all women should be treated with politeness. For this—to be gentle—lapse of memory, it may be admitted that girls themselves are occasionally to blame. They encourage a familiarity which leads, though they may not know it, to greater liberties.

Making all allowances, however, on this score, it is impossible to resist the feeling that it would be better for railway companies to set apart special ladies' compartments in every train, exactly as in the case with smoking carriages.

REMARKABLE SURGICAL OPERATION.

The London Lancet of last week contains the following remarkable account of an operation: The Choya Shimbun tells an extraordinary story of skill and courage on the part of a Japanese doctor. It runs to the effect that one morning as a certain man named Ito, was cleaning his teeth, by some means or other he let his tooth-brush slip down his throat. Medical assistance was at once procured, and the unfortunate man, who was suffering the acutest agony, drenched with purgatives, but all to no avail. It was not till the fifth day that a certain Dr. Hashimoto, principal of the highest medical college in Tokia, was called in. Dr. Hashimoto said there was just one chance to save the man, as the case was desperate it might as well be tried, for the patient would certainly die, and that almost immediately, if nothing was done. The friends consenting, chloroform was administered, and two deep incisions were made crosswise in the man's body. The stomach being laid bare, it was discovered that the tooth-brush was deeply embedded in it, and that one edge of the handle being sharp, it had worked its way half through. The thing was speedily extracted, and the two wounds, inner and onter, deftly sewn up by the operator. The Choya Shimbun adds that the man to whom the accident occurred is now in a fair way of recovery.

SMOKING OUT OBJECTIONABLE TENANTS.

The burning question at Montreal is whether a boarding-house keeper has a right to smoke out an undesirable boarder who refuses to go. A landlord had tried every means of getting rid of two of his boarders. He had endeavored to freeze them out—at which the other boarders mutinied; he attempted to eject them by letting on the steam till the house was at fever heat, but the defenders held the fort with the windows open. Then starvation was tried, but the enemy had meals sent up from a neighboring hotel. Next the furniture was taken away. Even that did not subdue the refractory boarders, for they promptly brought in furniture of their own. As a last resort the landlord resolved to drive them out by suffocation. Taking Cayenne pepper and asafœtida, he burned the articles in the room below and sent the fumes into the debateable territory through a hot air funnel. One of the boarders was nearly suffocated before the source of the trouble was found, and the other, running down stairs, found his persecutors dancing in high glee around the stove. It was now the boarders' turn. They filed an information against the other parties for conspiracy to commit unlawful acts, and the courts of the country are to decide whether it is lawful to titilate to an undue extent the olfactory nerves of a boarder who refuses to vacate when desired.

CENTENARISM.

The long-vexed question of the extreme limit of human life, as proved by authentic records, gives an interest to the view taken of the subject, not by mere curious spectators, but by grave actuaries. Dr. Farr, in his tables of the expectation of human life at various ages, not only accepts 100 as a recorded age, but estimates the average duration of life beyond that limit, as in the case of females about one year, nine months and three days; and, in the case of males, at about one month less than that time. No account however, is given of the extent of the data on which these nice calculations are based; nor does this eminent authority on vital statistics attempt to carry his investigation beyond the case of centenarians.

Do not speak with contempt and ridicule of a locality where you may be visiting. Find something to truthfully praise and commend; thus make yourself agreeable.

Many profess Christianity because they think the church fire-proof.

DURING THE LATE WAR

THE GOVERNMENT MADE ITS BEST ARMS AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS—WHAT MR. DAVID CLARK, INSPECTOR U. S. ARMORY THERE RECOMMENDS.

Your reporter found Inspector Clark at his office on the Armory grounds busily examining "receivers" for the regulation army rifles. However, he was as willing to say a word for the merits of health and strength restoratives as to prove the merits of implements of death. He said: "My business keeps me closely confined to the Armory and indoors. As a result, I've suffered considerably from indigestion and biliousness, but I find that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is a most excellent medicine for these camplafuts. I most cordially recommend it, for I am acquainted with its worth. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is used a great deal by the machinists in the U. S. Armory here."

While FAVORITE REMEDY is a specific in Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders and Constipation of the Bowels. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, FAVORITE REMEDY, he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. feb14—1m

New York Mercury for 1883.

Fully equipped with the finest printing machinery of the world, capable of working off 30,000 copies per hour, the NEW YORK MERCURY will enter upon its commencing January 6, 1883, with a determination to more than ever merit the liberal patronage which has marked its career for nearly half a century. Arrangements have been consummated, both at home and in Europe, to secure for the ensuing year many sterling novelties to increase the already incomparable variety of literary attractions which have always made the NEW YORK MERCURY a welcome guest in every home circle.

FORTY-FIFTH VOLUME,

REDUCED RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

But in order to enhance the already widespread circulation of the NEW YORK MERCURY, the proprietor has determined to reduce the annual subscription rate for 1883 from Three Dollars to Two Dollars and Fifty Cents per annum, thus making it the largest, handsomest, cheapest and best family paper in the United States. Each subscriber will get

1,800 SQUARE INCHES OF READING MATTER 52 TIMES A YEAR FOR $2.50,

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly, FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired.

Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

WINDING UP THE CLOCK,

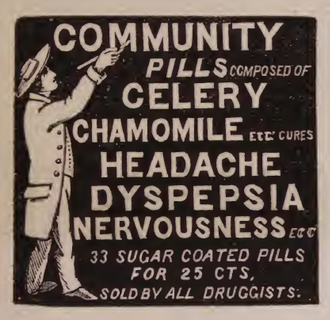
WHEN THE WEARY WHEELS WERE ALMOST STILL, A LUCKY ACCIDENT REVEALS THE LOST KEY.

"How long did you say you had it?"

"Twenty-five years."

"What! a bad cough with occasional attacks of hemorrhage, for twenty five years? Why, man, it's a mercy that there's a dozen pounds left of you."

Abraham Orner, of Highspire, Dauphin County, Pa., stuck to his statement, and when the exclamations of wonder ceased, he added:



"Exactly. You're right. It is a mercy.—But the greatest mercy of all is that before I actually coughed myself out of existence I got hold of PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and a few bottles cured me."

"Cured you? Relieved you, you mean."

"I mean what I say; it cured me," said Mr. Orner, simply. "I feel like another man."

Please take especial notice: PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger; not a mere stomachic. The ordinary preparations of ginger are beneficial for transient aches, but at that point their value ends.—PARKER'S GINGER TONIR covers a far wider and totally different field. It attacks and dissipates radical and chronic diseases of the Lungs, Kidneys, Liver and Nerves. It is as delicious to the palate as it is prompt and effective in operation. Ginger is only one among many powerful curatives which the TONIC holds in combination. Test its virtue for that cough of yours, or for any of the ills which require an invigorant for the whole system.

And above all, do not permit yourself to be misled. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC stands alone. Nothing else is "just the same," or "just as good." Prices 50c. and $1. Economy in buying the larger size. HISCOX & Co., New York. feb14—1m

CURIOUS HABITS OF ANTS.

Sir John Lubbock's extraordinary book on "Ants, Bees and Wasps," will amaze readers. Fancy ants having slaves! Fancy these proverbial examples to the sluggard keeping certain insects as we keep cows, and building sheds over them, and keeping others as pets! The aristocracy of ants seem to have all the vices which brought antique monarchies to destruction. Sir John writes soberly, as a philosopher should, and weighs his words no doubt, which makes his conclusions the more astonishing. The author quotes some of Huber's experiments, the value of which he has himself tested. The bloated ant aristocrats, it is said, "have lost the greater part of their instincts; their art, that is, the power of building; their domestic habits, for they show no care for their young, all this being done by the slaves; their industry, for they take no part in providing the daily supplies; if the colony changes the situation of its nest, the masters are all carried by the slaves on their backs to the new one; nay, they have even lost the habit of feeding. Huber placed thirty of them with some larvæ and pupæ and a supply of honey in a box. 'At first,' he says, 'they appeared to pay some little attention to the larvæ; they carried them here and there, but presently replaced them. More than one-half of the Amazons died of hunger in less than two days. They had not even traced out a dwelling; and the few ants still in existence were languid and without strength. I commiserated their condition, and gave them one of their black companions. This individual, unassisted, established order, formed a chamber in the earth, gathered together the larvæ, extricated several young ants that were ready to quit the condition of pupæ, and preserved the life of the remaining Amazons.' This observation has been fully confirmed by other naturalists. However small the prison, however large the quantity of food, these stupid creatures will starve in the midst of plenty rather than feed themselves.

* * * I have, however, kept isolated specimens for three months by giving them a slave for an hour or two a day to clean and feed them; under these circumstances they remained in perfect health, while, but for the slaves, they would have perished in two or three days."

FIFTEEN MILLION DOLLARS AN ACRE.

A New York correspondent states that "in the more common streets of New York land is worth from two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to three hundred and fifty thousand dollars per acre. In the best part of Broadway its value is increased to two million dollars per acre; but in the vicinity of Wall street its value is immensely increased because this locality is the money heart of America. The land on which the Drexel building stands cost its present owners at the rate of fourteen million dollars per acre. It occupies the corner of Wall and Broad streets, which may be considered the most valuable corner on this continent—and yet, when I was a Broad street clerk, in 1840, this very place was occupied by a hat store. The corresponding value of property in this neighborhood has been illustrated by the recent sale at the corner of Broad street and Exchange place, which was at the rate of fifteen million five hundred thousand dollars per acre. Hence the Drexel lot was none too dear. In fact, these dazzling figures are justified by the immensity of the transactions which occur here daily. Almost all the railroads on the continent (except New England) are managed within three hundred feet of this spot, and the general pressure of our immense financial system gives it a value which a few years ago could not have been dreamed of."

HOW TO TAKE PORTRAITS OF BURGLARS.

We have evidently entered the age of electricity, and I offer the suggestion of a detective trap for burglars as among the important possibilities. The burglar alarm now in use, true to its name, alarms the burglar, and he is away. Instead of ringing the alarm, let it be set to turn on momentarily the full glare of the electric light, and at the same instant have it expose a plate in a camera all ready to take an instantaneous picture. The burglar of course will take to flight, but will leave his photograph behind. The same blaze of light which has alarmed him will awaken the sleeping inmates, who can proceed at once to the camera and secure the negative. In order, however, that the camera should be set at the right focus the alarm used should be an electric mat set in a certain place on the floor, that spot being covered by the focus of the camera. In case of banks and safety deposit companies, the electric mats should be in front of the iron safes.—Scientific American.

EFFECT OF ALCOHOL.

Two French doctors at Grenelle have conducted, at the expense of a rich Swedish philanthropist a series of experiments upon pigs, for the purpose of ascertaining the effect of alcohol on the internal organs of drunkards. Fifteen pigs were treated daily upon various descriptions of alcohol, and then killed after the process of alcoholization had gone on for some time. Each pig had a different description of liquor, one had whisky, another brandy, a third absinthe, and so on. When killed, their vital organs were found to be marked with small spots resembling ulcers. Their flesh was sound, but when sent to market was seized as unfit for food.

It is a good rule to be deaf when a slanderer begins to talk.

It is wisdom to think, and folly to sit without thinking.

SMALL-POX and PITTING of Small Pox PREVENTED

A member of my family was taken with Small-pox. I used the Fluid; the patient was not delirious, was not pitted, and was about the house again in three weeks, and no others had it. —J. W. PARKINSON, Philadelphia.

Diphtheria Prevented.

The physicians here use Darbys Fluid very successfully in the treatment of Diphtheria.
A. STOLLENWERCK, Greensboro, Ala.

Tetter dried up.
Cholera prevented.
Ulcers purified and healed.
In cases of Death it should be used about the corpse—it will prevent any unpleasant smell.

The eminent Physician, J. MARION SIMS, M. D., New York, says: "I am convinced Prof. Darbys Prophylactic Fluid is a valuable disinfectant."

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy, Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I rebelved decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it"

J. E. Bruorton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

The NEW YORK, 1883. Sun.

More people have read THE SUN during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the earth has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credibly informed that people buy, read and like THE SUN for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at pr sent revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs THE SUN makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year, before election as well as after, about the whale as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The SUN has absolutely no purpose to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that the SUN is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robesonism and for honest government No matter what party is in power, the SUN stands and will continue to stand like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists, and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that the SUN is the best religious newspaper ever published, because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor.—A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the SUN discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know the SUN, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before.—If you do not already know the SUN, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of commonsense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

Terms to Mail Subscribers.

The several editions of THE SUN are sent by mail, postpaid, as follows:

DAILY—55 cents a month, $6.50 a year; with Sunday edition, $7.70.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—$1 year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues; an Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, market reports, and literary, scientific and domestic intelligence make THE WEEKLY SUN the newspaper for the farmer's household. To clubs of ten with $10, an extra copy free. Address

COLOGNE

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March 1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

Letter from Texas.

SAN ANTONIO, BEXAR CO., Jan 30, 1883.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Have been in Texas a year last November. I first came to Columbus, lived there six months, and not liking the climate, (being too damp), in July moved to San Antonio and like very much. Thinking you might like to hear something about this romantic city, thought I would try and give you a short description of it.

San Antonio is one of the oldest cities of the United States, and around it cluster the romantic reminiscences of heroic deeds of a hundred and fifty years. It still retains many of its former features of a Mexican town, though time and railroads have wrought great changes in their onward march of progress. The old adobe houses and tulle roofed huts of former days are still to be seen, 'tis true, but near by, the neat frame cottage, or the splendid stone business house reminds us that even this once sacred stronghold of the Franciscan fathers must undergo the metamorphosis from an old Spanish trading post of a few hundred inhabitants to a live, busy, noisy, American city. with its water-works, street cars, telephones, electric lights, and thousands of people of almost every shade of complexion and nationality. The palatial bazaar has supplanted the circumscribed Mexican tienda and on every hand improvement and progress are obliterating the primitive customs of years gone by. There is still, however, quite a large percentage of Mexican population in San Antonio, and the Mexican (or Military) plaza, from sundown until after sunrise, is an interesting scene to a stranger.

He will see numerous tables, presided over by Mexican men and women, who sell hot coffee, tamales, chili, con-carne, or "pepper with meat," and other Mexican dishes. In the early morning it presents a very interesting appearance. Mexican hucksters of wood, hay, corn, vegetables and various and sundry articles that the flesh likes to fall heir to, pursuing their traffic at that hour.

Owing to the very peculiar and irregular way in which the city is laid out, a stranger is liable to have some trouble in finding his way back to his hotel without a guide. There are three large plazas, or public squares, which appear to have been formed more by chance than design, connected by narrow streets, and several of which are the leading business streets of the city. A correct idea of the general appearance of the streets and plazas cannot be given.

Some of the business streets are not more than twenty feet in width. Those that have been made more recently, and by the Americans, are much wider. Avenue C——, which is one of the prettiest streets in the city, is eighty feet wide. The sidewalks on some of the business streets are scarcely three feet in width.

There are many old buildings in and around the city, which were erected more than one hundred years ago, and around which cluster many romantic historical memories. These old buildings were built by the Franciscan monks, as missions, with a view to the conversion of the Indians to the Christian religion. The town was settled by these monks in 1719, but it was not until about 1732 that permanent colonies were established by Spaniards from the Canary Islands.

The mission of San Fernando de Valero was built in 1719, and the old building is still standing on the main plaza, a revered monument to the pious zeal of the Franciscan priesthood. The original building has been somewhat modernized, but is much the same in general outline that it was one hundred and fifty years ago. The interior is beautifully decorated with oil paintings and statuary of Bible scenes and characters. The mission of San Jose, near the city, was built in 1720, and the Mission Conception in 1725. All these missions were secularized and abandoned in 1794 by Pedro Nava, Governor of Chihuahua. The lands around the Missions were divided among those Indians who desired to remain here. It is from these Indians and the early Spanish settlers that sprang the present race of Mexicans which live here.

The corner stone of the Alamo, (where David Crockett was killed) was laid in 1754. It was built as a church or mission of heavy stone walls, four feet thick, and afterwards used as a fortress. It stands upon the Alamo plaza, and is the property of the Catholic church, but is now used as a ware house. It ought to be bought by the State, and kept as a relic of the heroic sacrifice of life that was made within its walls by the noble defenders of Texas liberty in 1836.

The city is on the San Antonio river, a very pretty, pale blue stream, which traces a serpentine course, and is spanned by numerous iron bridges. It is only three miles to the San Antonio Spring, which is one of the most remarkable fountains in the world. A large stream of water here bursts from the rocks, and rolls down the valley with the dignity of a river. The city water-works get their supply from this Spring. There are also the lovely San Pedro Springs, a mile and a half north-west of the centre of the city, and at one of the termini of the horse-car line. There are eight or ten beautiful springs, within a nice shady park of live-oak, pecan, and willow trees, with numerous walks bordered with shrubs, flowers, century plants, and banana trees. Nice foot bridges are laid across the several streams which meander through the park: rustic seats, swings, bathing rooms, etc., are to be found there. These springs are the most popular resorts about the Alamo city; this is the picnic ground and general resort of the San Antonians, and the city is certainly very fortunate in having such a lovely park.

San Antonio is the headquarters of the war department for Texas; they are situated in the eastern part of the city. There are some splendid government buildings, also a tower ninety-five feet high with a clock on two sides of it. They have fifteen six mule teams which are employed most of the time in carrying supplies of some kind from one depot or the other, to the headquarters, and there to be distributed, and sent to the different posts throughout the state.

There are numerous ditches running through the city, which convey water for irrigating purposes to the market gardens several miles below town. These ditches are supposed to have been made by Spanish convicts, and Indian prisoners. They were forced to do this work, in payment for the gospel privileges so freely bestowed upon them.

San Antonio claims to have 30,000 inhabitants, notwithstanding the total population of Bexar county in 1880 was only 30,481. There has been a very rapid growth in the city for two years past, however. Over one thousand building permits have been issued within the last year and a half. The Americans and Germans are most numerous, about a third are Mexicans with a few English, French, Italians, Chinese and negroes. The Catholic Church is the strongest religious sect here; they have several places of worship, two or three schools, and two charity hospitals.

For more than one hundred years this place has been the center of a large traffic for Western Texas and Mexico. It is now the largest wool market in the State. About seven million pounds were shipped from here this year. A great deal of live stock is sold here. Car loads of mules, horses and beeves are shipped east, while a great many fine sheep are shipped to the stock brokers here, and sold by them to the ranchmen. Cotton growing is becoming more popular in the country surrounding the city.

The great want of the place heretofore has been railroads. There have been two here for some time, and Jan. 12th the last spike that connects the Southern Pacific and the Sunset road, was driven with appropriate ceremonies, and now the waters of the Pacific ocean are connected by rail with those of the Gulf of Mexico.

Western Texas has long been noted for its freedom from malaria, and has been greatly sought, by invalids, in search of a genial climate. In the winter season the city is filled to over-flowing with people, coming from all parts of the country to avoid the cold weather. We have been having cool weather the past week, the thermometer being down to freezing, but to-day it is lovely. I am sitting in my room writing without any fire.

San Antonio and the surrounding country offers liberal inducements and attractions to the capitalist, agriculturalist, stockman and farmer. Farming has been done on a very small scale heretofore, but is yearly becoming more popular. While in this part of the state, it is more of a stockraising than a farming country, yet there is in the eastern portion, a great deal of fine farming land, most of which is well adapted to corn, cotton, and vegetables. Seasons are not very certain here, but the best land of this section, is a deep sandy loam with clay foundation, is pre-eminently well adapted to drouth, and is easily cultivated. Good land can be bought within fifteen or twenty miles of the city for from three to six dollars per acre. Nearer the city it is higher of course. Peaches do very well here, melons grow very large and are of fine flavor, vegetables grow luxuriantly, and everything in the line of fruit and vegetables bring a good price in San Antonio.

In fact, this is one of the best markets for the farmer to sell everything he can raise that one could wish. Irish and sweet potatoes grow in great abundance on the sandy lands, and bring good prices in the city. Pecans abound on the creeks and are worth from one to two dollars a bushel. Flowers grow in abundance here and it is quite a profitable business, as they can be shipped North before the snows have melted there.

The San Antonians are liberal in their patronage of the home press. There are three English and one German daily papers, one German semi-weekly, four or five English weeklies, and a monthly wool journal, published here—all of which seem to be in a prosperous condition.

MISS NELLIE PINGREE.

The Springfield Republican says that Secretary Folger is just now passing through the experience of reforming the collection districts. He proposes to consolidate the 140 collection districts of the national coasts and frontier into 73, reducing employes from 4262 to 4053 and saving about $500.00 in salaries and expenses. Newburyport, Gloucester, Salem and Marblehead will constitute the Salem district, Plymouth and Cape Cod will go into the Boston district, and the rest of the Massachusetts coast into the New Bedford district. It will surely evince the dawn of the reform era, if Secretary Folger is able to oust the superfluous officials who have so long nested in these places.

The services which Hon. E. H. Haskell, of Gloucester, has rendered during several years past as Secretary of the Republican State Committee, have been pleasantly acknowledged by a note from the chairman and secretary of the reorganized committee.

The Odd Fellows of Lynn are about to add fresh laurels to their already well earned reputation for charities. Committees have been appointed from each of the subordinate lodges to take into consideration the matter of the establishment of a bed at the new hospital for the benefit of Odd Fellows who may become injured or in any way incapacitated so that immediate medical treatment is rendered necessary. This action will undoubtedly be encouraged by all the Odd Fellows in our city. Many members of the order from lodges in other towns, cities and states come here to stay a short time, leaving home and kindred to dwell among strangers. They are liable to meet with accidents, proper treatment for which could not be rendered in the boarding houses where the larger portion of them reside. The project of the establishment of this bed will be of unmeasurable benefit in such cases, and so it will to those of our own citizens who are members of the order. We understand the managers are disposed to encourage the project and will do all in their power to aid in its furtherance.—Lynn Bee.

SENSIBLE ADVICE.—According to the Stationer and Printer, the man who does his business on business principles is not afraid of a panic this year, or any other. The man who cuts his own prices below a living figure is going to have the biggest kind of a panic. It is coming to him just as sure as fate, if he does not reform before it is too late. Turn over a new leaf; brace up; don't look upon your competitors as devils; don't believe all your customers tell you about your competitors' prices; have a backbone of your own; set your own prices, and make your customers come up to you; don't be forever getting on your knees, and begging work that you can't make your salt out of. Let somebody else talk panic until the sheriff closes them out.

Dramatic and Musical.

Mary Anderson has been playing at the Boston Theatre to very large business, and her engagement closes with this week. A special matinee will be given to-morrow afternoon (22d Feb.), at which Lady of Lyons will be presented. At the Saturday matinee "Pygmalion & Galatea, and Miss Anderson's engagement will close with a special entertainment Saturday night, in which Mr. George Riddle will appear. Next week Mapleson's Italian Opera will appear in a two weeks' engagement.

At the Park Theatre this third week of Margaret Mather's engagement will be made noteworthy by the first appearances of the young artiste in Boston in the title-role of the powerful and moving drama, "Leah, the Forsaken." There are great opportunities in the play for the exhibition of power. What she can do in great dramatic exigencies, the lady's portrayal of the varying emotions which sway the troubled mind of Juliet as she puts the potion to her lips give abundant proof. Next week will be her closing week at the Park. The advance sale of tickets has been very large.

The Two Orphans with the original Union Square Theatre cast will hold the boards at the Globe Theatre this week. Miss Kate Claxton will appear as "Louise" the blind girl, and as the play has not been brought out for some time in Boston. We anticipate large houses.

The reign of opera at the Bijou is as uninterruptedly successful as ever. The 100th night of Gilbert & Sullivan's work will soon be on hand, and seats are still in the liveliest demand for weeks and weeks to come. The management has issued a neat time-table of "Iolanthe" so that the patrons may know just when to expect their favorite air.

It is understood that Mr. D. J. Maguinness, the favorite comedian, will have a strong part, particularly adapted to his mirthmaking abilities, in the new melo-drama soon to be seen at the Boston Theatre.

N. W. Andrews & Co. brought out a rich and novel variety entertainment in Hyde & Behman's specialty combination last Thursday night in Salem. The audience were enthusiastic and fun abounded.

To-morrow afternoon and evening N. W. Andrews & Co. will bring Palmer & Ulmer's company to Salem in the play of '49. The Hartford Evening Post thus refers to a late appearance of the company in that city: The Palmer & Ulmer company had a large-sized audience at the Opera House last evening, when they appeared in "Forty-Nine." The leading character was taken by Miss Lizzie May Ulmer, and her rendition of the part of Carrots was both amusing and attractive. Frequently as the play advanced she was loudly applauded, and increased to a large degree the highly favorable opinion held of her in Hartford. George T. Ulmer as Old '49 gave a fine representation of the Californian of early days, and was frequently applauded.

On Friday evening next, the popular Thatcher, Primrose & West consolidated Minstrel Company will come to Salem once more. The visit will be hailed with genuine satisfaction by very many of our citizens. They achieved great triumphs at their recent engagement in the Boston Theatre, and will bring here an entirely new programme. They may count on a full house at Mechanic Hall on Friday night, and the audience may feel assured of getting the full value of their investment.

The Boston Theatre Company received a hearty ovation, last Friday night, as they deserved. Mr. Redmond, Mrs. Barry, Miss Muldener, Dan Maguinness and the old favorites were at their best, and the White Slave was brought out as near the original production as the facilities at Mechanic Hall would permit.

To-morrow night a benefit is to be given Miss Minnie K. Felt, the contralto of the Unitarian Church, at the Chapel of the Barton-square Church, Salem. Miss Felt has many friends in town, and we trust she may have a good attendance.

The latest opera of Gilbert & Sullivan, "Iolanthe," was well presented on Monday evening in Mechanic Hall. The members of the troupe were familiar with their parts, the costumes were elegant, and the audience enthusiastic.

Messrs. Editors: It is not my desire to enter into any controversy, and I do not write this in a controversial spirit. Simply as a matter of instruction to my own congregation and any others who may choose to receive the instruction, I would like to show the positive position of the Church of which I am an unworthy minister with regard to one assertion which you make in your leading editorial of January 31st.

You draw a comparison between Protestantism and Catholism. The positive position of the Episcopal church (so-called) is well known to the Press. But of course I understand you to include, under the name Protestant, the Episcopal Church. Of course you mean by Protestants all who are not Romanists.

To one single point, then, I wish to call attention.

You compare the attendance at the public services of the Roman Church with the attendance at other places—and say: "With the Protestant churches . . . . . attendance on Divine worship is not regarded as a duty, unless to it is added the inclination of the worshipper." Now I am only speaking for the body of which I am a minister, and not for any other. We hold and teach, and have always held and taught, that attendance upon divine worship is a very positive and fundamental Christian duty apart from the inclination of the individual. It seems strange to us to say that to worship God is not a duty except when one feels like it. No condition is made, so far as we can see, with regard to this command, any more than with regard to any other command. The duty of public worship as of prayer and fasting and alms-giving, runs through the older dispensation and rests upon God's positive command. The New Testament, all through, takes for granted the duty of public worship, and indeed there are many very positive commands which cannot at all be obeyed without attendance upon public worship.

There has, time and again, been much discussion in the various religious bodies as to this matter of small attendance. Many reasons have been given, but I think very seldom has it been remarked "People do not go because they do think it a a positive duty, unless they feel like it." If we never do anything that we do not feel like doing the world would be in a worse muddle than it is.

I do not feel called upon to remark upon the failure or success of Protestantism, but I should suppose that it must fail, if its principle is that "Attendance on Divine worship is not regarded as a duty, unless to it is added the inclination of the worshipper."

Yours truly,

Geo. Walker.

Peabody, Feb. 14, '83.

On Monday evening the members of the Murray club were favored by the presentation of Miles Standish's Courtship. The poem was read by Albert Merrill in a pleasing and creditable manner and was illustrated by a series of tableaus which were very successful. Careful attention was paid to accuracy of costume and the result was good. Priscilla, John Alden, the redoubtable Captain, the venerable elder of Plymouth were each made realities. The Indian camp was very excellent. The whole affair was entertaining to those who witnessed and reflected credit on those who planned and those who executed it.

The following are the unclaimed letters at the post office Feb. 21. 1883: Mrs. William Andrews, Mr. E. Brindley, T. L. Colburn, Marion L. Durfee, Michael Davey, Michael Dugen, Michael Duggan, Mary E. A snow slide from the roof of Upton's building last Saturday morning frightened the horse of Mr. Frank W. Stanley, attached to a sleigh and hitched in front of the post office. The horse ran through Foster and Oak streets, and was stopped on Aborn street.

The old Naumkeag House in its present condition is not a very pleasing landmark. Fire has removed a part of it and the rest seems to await earthquake, hurricane, lightning, typhoon, tidal-wave, comet or whatever other destructive agent happens along.

An interesting letter from Rev. Mr. Walker, and the second instalment of the journal of J. G. Phelps, will be found in this week's Press. Other communications, among them an original sketch, are unavoidably crowded out. They will appear in due time.

Last Sunday evening about half past nine, a man named McGeer, living on Spring street, was assaulted by a couple of young fellows named Roach and Gammon. McGeer was pretty roughly handled and his eye was blacked and his face considerably damaged. The parties were arrested.

As the nine o'clock morning train for Danvers was leaving the station last Monday morning, a cat belonging in the neighborhood was foolish enough to run under the train. In about a moment there was a cry and that feline darted across Central street leaving the majority of its tail under the wheel of the departing train.

It is stated that among the improvements to be made at the railroad station is the enlargement of the ticket office to occupy in part the present baggage room, and a part of the gentlemens' waiting room, and the removal of the partition between the ladies' and gentlemens' room. All these improvements will be welcomed.

A drunken fellow named Pat. Hurley and known as "The Shaver" entered a boarding house near the Square yesterday morning, and going up stairs assaulted one of the servant girls. The brute choked her, leaving the print of his fingers on her throat. Her cries for help alarmed the fellow and he immediately left.

A snow slide from the new town hall last Saturday forenoon caused a narrow escape for a couple of boys who were passing on Chestnut street. One of them named Murphy was struck with the snow and knocked down. He was badly frightened but no injuries were sustained. Had he been two feet nearer, the result would have been different.

The committee have decided to make the stage of the new Town Hall three feet wider the dimensions as at present determined, are to be 31 1-2x48. This will make it amply proportionate to the size of the hall itself. The contractors expect to commence lathing this week. As soon as the slaters and tinmen have completed their work, a large force of men will be employed.

The Boston Herald published the following special despatch last Friday. Mr. John A. Enos of Peabody, Mass., who is the inventor of a machine for taking and recording the vote of legislative assemblies, has been in Wash. for several days, and has shown his plans to a number of members, who regard his invention as a curious one.

Rev. S. P. Smith of Marblehead entertained some three hundred of the members of his church at the Universalist vestry in that town recently. It was the occasion of Mr. Smith's birthday. Mrs. Smith read several selections which were followed by singing and speech-making. At about 9 o'clock the company were invited to a bountiful collation.

The social, given by the ladies of the Baptist society last Thursday, was quite successful notwithstanding the stormy weather. Those present sat down to bountifully laden tables and partook of the excellent bill of fare, and there was abundant social enjoyment besides. It was an exceedingly pleasant affair. Another will be given next month.

The ladies of the Unitarian Society announce a Fair in their chapel on the afternoons and evenings of next Wednesday and Thursday. Wednesday evening a mute supper will be held; Thursday evening an entertainment by the Unity club will be presented, and the entire proceeds are to be devoted to the liquidation of the debt on the parsonage.

Dr. Frank H. Stockwell of this town was united in marriage last Friday to Miss Sadie B., daughter of J. W. P. Jenks, Prof. of Natural History in Brown University. The ceremony took place at the residence of the bride's father in Middleboro. Mr. and Mrs. Stockwell will reside in town for the present, but will probably remove to Ipswich, where Dr. Stockwell has a dental office.

On Monday evening the members of Bowditch Lodge, 619, Knights of Honor, had the pleasure of receiving the Grand Dictator, Grand Reporter and District Deputy Grand Dictator. After an interchange of courtesies and a brief season of social communion, the business of the evening was attended to. Although the Knights of Honor is one of the oldest, soundest and best organizations of its kind, so many rivals have entered the field, that the members of Bowditch Lodge have been in doubt whether it was wiser to continue as a lodge or to become members of some other lodge; a decision was however deferred to a later meeting to be held shortly.

Poet's Corner.

An Old Wife's Valentine.

The old wife stood at her garden gate
The eve of St. Valentine's Day;
She watched for the post, that like a Fate
Just stopped and then galloped away—
Just stopped, and then, in the waning light,
Passed over the hill and out of sight.

Her grandchild tugged at her shawl and gown,
And her daughter called, sweet and clear,
"Mother, come in, for the cakes are brown
And the boys and father are here."
"Ah, yes," she said, "and the night is cold;
I quite forgot that I'm growing old."

At breakfast lay at the father's place
A letter as white as snow;
He looked at it with a curious face,
And said, "Now, I want to know!"
The boys all smiled: the mother grew
O'er face and throat a crimson hue.

He opened the dainty letter then,
And lo! in its satiny fold
Was painted rose and forget-me-not,
And lilies with hearts of gold;
And, under the whole, just one sweet line
"Forever, forever, thy Valentine."

He touched the note with a tender care,
And he went to his sweet wife's side:
He stroked with his hand her snow-white hair,
And he kissed her with loving pride,
Saying, with smiles and misty tears,
"My Valentine through fifty years."

"O, boys," he said, with a youthful pride,
"After fifty years of life,
If you find in your home and by your side,
A fair and a faithful wife,
Count your life lucky, as I count mine,
And loyally kiss your Valentine."

—Mary A. Barr, in Harper's Weekly.

The Young Widow.

ANON.

She is cunning, sometimes witty,
Free and easy, but not bold;
Like an apple, ripe and mellow,
Not too young, and not too old;
Half inviting, half-repellant,
Now advancing, and now shy;
There is mischief in her laughter,
There is danger in her eye.

She has studied human nature,
She is schooled in every art;
She has taken her diploma
As the mistress of her heart!
She can tell the very moment
When to sigh and when to smile!
Oh! the maid is sometimes charming,
But a widow all the while!

Are you sad? oh! then how serious
Will her pretty face become!
Are you angry? she is wretched,
Saddened, friendless, tearful, dumb.
Are you mirthful? how her laughter
Silver-sounding, will ring out?
She can lure, and catch, and play you,
As an angel does a trout!

Ah! "old fossils," nearly fifty,
Who are plodding, deep and wise;
Ye "Adonises," of twenty,
With the love-light in your eyes!
You may practice all the lessons
Taught by Cupid since the fall;
But I know a little widow
Who can win and fool you all!

Waiting.

Soft fall the snow-flakes down,
Over the fields and town;
Bending tree-branches brown—
Shrouding the earth.

Pure as the northern star,
White as death roses are;
Grey clouds in heaven afar,
Giving them birth.

Once I—oh, long ago,
Peeping through falling snow,
Watched my love's footsteps slow,
Leaving my side.

Fond eyes looked back to see,
Dear voice called out to me;
"Soon I return to thee,
Darling—my bride."

Years come, and pass me by,
Breezes of summer sigh;
Autumn and winter fly—
Spring flowers bloom.

But through sun, snow or rain,
Sing I this one refrain;
How long shall I in vain
Wait till he come?

—Good Cheer.

Selected Story.

Troubles of a Bridal Party.

'Say, what kind of a hotel do you keep?' said a green looking man, as he stepped up to the counter and registered his name, and added 'and wife' after it. 'Can a new married couple settle down here for two or three days and have a quiet visit with each other, and not be scared out of their boots?'

The hotel man said they could go right to their room and stay there three days or three weeks, and never come to their meals if they didn't want anything to eat. 'But what is the matter? Have you been annoyed?' asked the hotel man.

'Annoyed! That don't express it. We were married day before yesterday, at St. Paul, and the traveling men put up a job to make me tired. There were about a hundred of them snowed in at St. Paul, and I'll be darned if they didn't keep us awake all night. They knew we were a bridal couple, and they bribed the bell boys and porters to let them act for them, and when we rung the bell for the bell boy, a drummer for a Chicago cigar factory came in and wanted to know what was wanted. I ordered a pitcher of ice water, and a Milwaukee drummer for a grocery house brought it in, and he looked at my wife, who is bashful, and made her feel real bad. I didn't know they were drummers until the next day, or I should have killed some of them. I rung the bell for coal, and a traveling man who posts railroad cards around, and works up excursions, he came in and fixed the fire, and he stayed and poked it for half an hour, and he had more gall than I ever see. He asked so many questions about how long we had been married, that I wanted to thump him, but my wife said we didn't want to have no row the first day we were married. I rung for a chamber maid to clean up the room and bring some towels, and it was about half an hour before she came, and I went down to the office to see about my trunk, and the chamber-maid stayed about half an hour, and was very pleasant and interesting, and my wife said she was a real, pleasant, affectionate sort of a creature, far above her station, and I tell you I was mad when I found out that it was the smooth faced, handsome young Jewish drummer for a Milwaukee clothing house, who was in with the gang, and he gave the chamber-maid three dollars to loan him an old dress so he could play chamber-maid. When my wife told me that he-chamber-maid patted her on the cheek, and said she was the sweetest bride that was ever in the hotel, and asked for a kiss, and my wife said she thought it would be no harm to kiss a poor chamber-maid, and encourage her, I wanted to kill him, and I went down to the office the next morning, but the smooth faced cuss had gone to Fargo. It was all the landlord could do to hold me. Well, while we were at supper somebody got into the room and put cracker crumbs in our bed, and we found a cold oil-cloth floor mat over the top sheet, enough to freeze anybody. But the worst was at night. We had just got comfortably in bed when there was a knock at the door, and I got up, and the watchman was there, and he said he wanted to point out to me the fire escape, so I could get out in case of fire, and I went out in the hall and he took me way out to the end of the building to show it to me, and while I was looking out of the window my wife came running down the hall and begging me to save her. I asked her what was the matter and she said as soon as I went out a man that looked like a porter, came in and told her to fly, and save herself, and follow her husband. She felt awful when she found there was no trouble, and we got back into our room half froze. I have got them fellows down fine. The fellow who called me out to look at the fire escape, is a drummer for a Philadelphia millinery house, and the one that scared my wife out of her wits, travels for a hearse factory at Rochester, N. Y. My wife says she would know him, because he has a big gray moustache, and wears a diamond collar button in his shirt. She said she thought he was pretty stylish for a porter, at the time. They woke us up several times in the night, to tell us what to do in case we were sick, and in the morning, before we were up, a waiter brought up our breakfast. He said the landlord sent it up, and he just stood around until we had to sit up in bed and eat breakfast. I thought at the time that it was kind in the landlord to send up our breakfast, but when I found that the waiter who brought it up was a traveling man for a reaper factory at Rockford, and remembered how darned impudent he looked at my wife, I could have murdered him, but the clerk said he had gone to Winnipeg. It was just about as bad coming down here on the sleeping car, and I think half the passengers on the car were those same drummers that were snowed in. It was colder than Alaska, and I would order blankets, and they would steal them. I had more than twenty blankets put on the bed, and in the morning there was nothing but a sheet over us. And every time there was a blanket spread over us there was a different porter put it on, and I think they were all traveling men. Every little while somebody would pull open the curtains and sit down on my berth and begin to pull off his boots, and I would tell him the berth was occupied, and that he must have made a mistake, and he would look around at us as innocent as could be, and ask our pardon, and then go out and damn the porter. Once I felt somebody feeling about my berth and I asked what was the matter, and the fellow said he was looking for my wife's shoes to black. Then about every fifteen minutes the conductor would open the curtains, and hold a red lantern in and ask for our tickets. I think they punched my ticket sixty-five times. Any way it looked like a porous plaster when I got up in the morning. I think it was the traveling men who were playing conductor, but I was sleepy and I thought the best way was to let them punch it. Well, about three o'clock in the morning somebody punched us and said it was time to get up, and all the passengers were up, and we would have breakfast in fifteen minutes. And then we hustled around and got dressed the best we could, laying on our backs, and kicking our clothes up in the air and catching them on ourselves when they came down. I got my pants on wrong side before, and lost everything out of my pockets, and my wife lost her hair, and had to tie a handkerchief around her head, and then we had our berths made up and sat up till daylight, and the porter found my wife's hair and pinned it to the curtains of a berth occupied by a preacher from Oshkosh, and he kicked, and got mad, and talked about it, and wondered how it came there, and he swore about it, and I think he travels for an Oshkosh carriage factory. O, I never had such a night, or two such nights, in all my life, and what I want to know is, if I can be quiet here, and get a little sleep, and not be annoyed.' The hotel man told him if anybody came around to bother him, to knock them clear down stairs, and he would be responsible, and the bridegroom took his satchel and his wife, and the colored man showed them a room, and they have not showed up since. It is confounded mean in traveling men to get snowed in and form a syndicate to have fun. They will cause themselves to be disliked if they keep on.—Peck's Sun.

One of the richest stories we've heard for a long time was told us, to-day, about a well-known and influential citizen of Franklin county. He went to Montreal, to attend the ice carnival. He proposed to arrive home last Saturday. He reached Lewiston that day, and fell in with some of his old and jolly friends, who urged him to remain here over Sunday promising to make it pleasant for him. He agreed to this, and Saturday P. M., he telegraphed to his wife, 'Missed train. Will be home Monday.' That same evening, he received the following enigmatic dispatch from his home, 'Mother and child doing as well as could be expected.' He was nonplussed and telegraphed for a further explanation. He received no answer, and didn't enjoy his stay-over in Lewiston a bit. On Monday he started for home on the first train, much pricked by the nettles of his conscience and the electric wires. At Leeds Junction, a telegram reading 'All O. K.' was handed him. 'That's worth a hundred dollars to me,' he exclaimed to the conductor. When he reached his town, he sprang from the cars and found his wife waiting for him in a sleigh. She laughed hugely at his evident discomfiture and the success of her joke. It was another case of 'an unequal match.'—Lewision Journal.

The chief of the St. Louis fire department spends his time when he is not engaged looking after fires in squelching 'mashers' on the streets, and bold bad men generally, who toy with the hearts of girls on the streets, who look out from under their bangs with a guileless wink of their eye. The chief was riding along the streets of St. Louis the other day when he saw a masher busily engaged mashing the heart of one of the belles of the city. Getting out of his buggy he gave him a sound thrashing, and the Merchants' Exchange has presented the chief with an elegant gold mounted whip as a slight token of its esteem of his efforts to rid the city of mashers. This suggests a new field of labor for a fire department that has a good deal of spare time hanging idly on its hands. In places where there are more mashers than fires, the department should be called out to extinguish the former.

Book Notices.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE.—The contents of LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for March are unusually varied, and include several articles of special interest. Professor James D. Butler has an apparently exhaustive paper on the "Portraits of Columbus," proving that the greater number of the pretended likenesses of the great discoverer are wholly fictitious. "Invalid Life in the South" sums up the experiences of five years spent in the recovery of health, and contains much information and suggestions that cannot fail to be useful to those who are in search of a genial climate and other favorable conditions with the like object. The new instalment of "The Jewel in the Lotos," by Mary Agnes Tincker, contains some striking scenes and exquisite descriptions. Among the short stories, "Carita," by G. H. Pierce, is a very graceful and pathetic sketch. The poetry of the number by Carlotta Sperry, Marion Couthouy, and Charles L. Hildreth, and the "Monthly Gossip" includes several timely papers, most of them biographical and anecdotal.

The North American Review for March opens with an article on "Money in Elections" by Henry George, who points out with admirable clearness one source of our political ills, and proposes a remedy that seems both eminently practicable and efficient. Robert S. Taylor writes of the "Subjugation of the Mississippi," Moncure D. Conway contributes a very striking study of Gladstone as a man and a statesman. Hon. George W. Julian's "Railway Influence in the Land Office" is a grave, judicial exposure of the practices which have won for corporations millions upon millions of acres of the public domain. Richard A. Procter writes of the "Pyramid of Cheops;" Prof. Wm. G. Sumner of the "Protective Taxes and Wages;" Elizur Wright of "Some Aspects of Life Insurance;" and finally, there is a symposium on "Educational Needs," by Prof. G. Stanley Hall, Prof Felix Adler, President Thomas Hunter, and Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by booksellers generally.

The March Atlantic continues the high excellence reached by two preceding numbers for this year. The third and concluding part of Mr. Longfellow's dramatic poem "Michael Angelo" occupies thirty-one pages, John Burroughs gives an interesting account of a trip "In Carlyle's Country." Agnes Paton, who has contributed some very striking short stories to the Atlantic, this month has another entitled "Antagonism." Mr. George P. Lathrop, Hawthorne's son-in-law, contributes an article, on "The Hawthorne Manuscripts." Henry James writes in his best vein of "Tommaso Salvini," an article which the multitude of admirers of this great actor will read with great interest. "The City of Earthquakes," by Horace D. Warner, is a paper of startling interest on the frequency and effect of earthquakes at Caracas, in Venezuela. The most noticeable brief poem of the number is by Dr. Holmes,—"A Loving-Cup Song." Other poems and reviews of important new books, with a Contributors' Club of excellent variety, and brief notices of books of the month, conclude another admirable number of the Atlantic.

IN DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE for March we find a great variety of interesting articles. Among these are "Life in the Black Forest," "Gastronomic Gossip," and "The Grodner Valley." Jenny June continues her pleasant articles, "How We Live in New York," and Carlotta Perry furnishes an excellent story, "How I found My Freedom." Every department is replete with useful and entertaining reading, and the illustrations are remarkably good, the frontispiece being a fine steel engraving after the much-admired painting "Willing," by the artist Metzmacher. As a family magazine, Demorest's fulfills every requirement.

THE WASHINGTON WORLD AND CITIZEN-SOLDIER, the old soldiers' paper, the people's paper, is now in its eighth year, enlarged to 48 columns, 8 pages, in entire new dress, every week, at only One Dollar a year. Specimen copy free to any address, on receipt of postal card request by the World and Soldier Publishing Company, World Building, 1006 F. St., Washington, D. C.

The prettiest stock of Hamburg edgings and insertions we have seen for many a day is now open and for sale at Peabody's.

To illustrate the effect of the French Canadian immigration into New England, says the Journal of Education, we can cite a town not 50 miles from Boston which has a population not exceeding 1200 by the census of 1880. There is in the town a brick manufactory which employs for five months of each year 150 French Canadians, who, as a rule, can neither read nor write. The census was taken during the summer, while these persons were resident in that town, and, by the census returns, the town is credited with 8 per cent. of its population as illiterate; when to our personal knowledge, every native inhabitant can read and write, and, so far as we know, nearly every other person with the exception of this annual migration of illiteracy. The schools of the State and town cannot be held responsible for this peculiar condition of affairs. It is abnormal and no more reflects upon the efficiency and value of the school system than does the catalogue of suicides in Paris on the water-supplies of the Seine.

There has been more accomplished in the way of promoting sobriety in town through the instrumentality of moral suasion in the past two months, than has been accomplished in years by coercive measures.—Woburn Advertiser.

SHORTS.—One car load heavy Winter Wheat Shorts. For sale by CHARLES A. ROPES & SON,
41 to 47 Central street.

MARK-DOWN.
We offer to make to order our overcoating and heavy weight suitings at cost. This will save you from $3 to $6 on an overcoat or a suit. We do this to run off some of our heavy weights and make room for spring and summer goods which we have already purchased. Parties who have been trading with us will remember that our goods are all plainly marked, so that there is no sham about this. We shall quote prices from $3 to $6 less than the original prices.

Anecdotes.

AROUND THE WORLD IN LESS THAN EIGHTY DAYS.

Rufus Mallory, who returned a few days since from a trip around the world, was last evening interviewed by a Standard reporter, to whom he furnished the following synopsis of his voyage: He left Portland May 31. and sailed from San Francisco on the steamer Oceanic, June 6, arriving at Yokohama on the twenty-fifth. Spent a few day, there, and visited Tokio, the capital of the Japanese empire. From Yokohama he went to Shanghai, on the way touching at Kobe and Nasasaki. From Shanghai he went by way of Hong Kong to Singapore, to visit which place was the object of his journey.

Finding that he would make the trip home more quickly by going ahead than by turning back, he took passage on a French steamer from Singapore to Naples. The steamer called at Colombo, where "balmy breezes blow softly o'er Ceylon's isle," and then at Aden, in Arabia, then at Suez, and through the Suez Canal to Port Said, and across the Mediterranean to Naples. He passed Ismailia the day the battle was fought near by, but did not take a hand. He had intended to cross Egypt and have a look at the Pyramids and Sphinx, but Arabi Pasha had all the rolling stock of the railroad corralled, so he went straight to Naples, arriving there Aug. 31.

During the time spent in Italy he ascended Vesuvius, visited Pompeii, and Herculaneum, and stayed several days at Rome. From the Eternal City he went to Pisa, as everybody does, to see the leaning tower, and after viewing the landscape from the top of it went to Venice and stood upon the Bridge of Sighs, and had a sail in a gondola; thence passed on to Florence, and thence to Milan and over the Alps by the pass of St. Gothard, preferring that route to going through the tunnel.

He next visited Metz, and thence to Paris and on to London. Spent ten days in this immense city, and saw as much of it as was possible in that time. From London to Liverpool and thence home is an every-day trip. The steamer Alaska, on which he took a passage from Liverpool to New York, was no everyday affair, however, as her rate of speed was from four hundred and twenty-five to four hundred and thirty-five miles per day.

From reading Jules Verne one is led to suppose that it is a great feat to go round the world in eighty days, but the time spent by Mr. Mallory in actual travel was less than that, and he is confident that he can make the trip in seventy days.—Portland Standard.

A JUST JUDGE.

Occasionally you find a just judge. The other day Col. Laugbick, a prominent Arkansaw merchant, was arrested on a charge of seriously beating young Hickleton with a club. When the case came up for trial the judge said:

"Colonel, it is unnecessary for me to tell you that this is a serious affair. This young man, in all the promise of ripening manhood, is seized by you, without the slightest provocation and severely clubbed."

"Your honor," replied Laugbick, "there was serious provocation, sufficient, I think, to clear me before any considerate court."

"Did he strike you?"

"No, sir."

"Did he steal anything from you?"

"No."

"Then, sir, the thumb-screws of the law must be placed upon you."

"Hold on, judge, let me state my case. Some time ago, this young man came to my store and wanted a situation. I told him that I had no room for him and he went away, but returned in a few days and again applied for a place, declaring he was willing to work for almost nothing. I again declared that I did not want him, but two days afterwards when he came and declared that he must have a place I agreed to let him stay in the store. The next morning, your honor, one of our city papers contained the following notice: 'Our young friend, James Hickleton, has accepted a situation at Laugbick's establishment. The house may congratulate itself upon the acquisition.' You see he had accepted a place. Well, I mauled him; mauled him down into the cellar and mauled him up stairs."

After a moment's reflection the judge said, "Too many young men are accepting situations. No one is securing a place, so, under the circumstances, colonel, you are discharged, and as for you, young man, you may send for a reparter and tell him that as the court fails to accept a fine, you have accepted a prominent position on the rock pile."—Arkansaw Traveler.

AN ELECTRIC ORCHESTRA.

A curious musical entertainment has been arranged at a circus in the Champs Elysees. Instruments, including bells, flutes, cymbals, drums, hautboys of special nature, &c., are placed around the circus and connected by wires with an electric keyboard in the centre. There is also below the circus a machine similarly connected which gives a rumbling sound like that heard in earthquakes. A piece is performed on four trumpets in the centre of the circus, and one of the performers presses now and again on the keyboard, bringing into action the distant instruments as desired. He is also enabled in the same way to produce distant detonations and ignite blue lights.

Without good nature, man is but a better kind of vermin.

That is half granted which is denied graciously.

Miscellaneous.

Browne's Phonographic Monthly is one of the best magazines with which our table is graced. Every phonographer should have it. Contains 32 pages, and only costs $2.00 a year, or 20 cents for a single copy. D. L. Scott-Browne, Publisher, 23 Clinton Place, N. Y.

Webster, the lexicographer, defines Catarrh to be, "a discharge of fluid from the mucous membrane, especially of the nose, fauces, and the bronchial passages, caused by a cold in the head." It is a disease common alike to all classes of society. Unlike an ordinary cold, it cannot be cured by family remedies, but requires an antidote from the ranks of materia medica. The preparation so universally known under the name of Ely's Cream Balm is a sovereign, unfailing cure for Catarrh. It is a neat, pleasant, yet thoroughly efficacious remedy. "I have been troubled with Catarrh so badly," writes B. F. Leipsner, A. M. of Red Bank, N. J., "for several years that it seriously affected my voice. I tried various remedies without relief. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored and my head feels better than for years." 50 cents only.

In the Lunatic Hospital at Danvers, there were 660 patients at the commencement of the month of February. Of these 321 were males and 355 females. They are supported as follows; 132 by the State, 418 by towns, and 110 by their friends. The whole number admitted to the hospital since its opening in May, 1878, is 2710.

A TOOTHSOME MORSEL.—This from the Madison (Wis.) Democrat, conveys its own moral:—Hold on! We are cognizant of the fact that an aching tooth was last night cured by the application of St. Jacobs Oil. The young fellow got mad over his raging tooth in the ball room, and rushed straightway to a drug store where he applied the good old German Remedy; in ten minutes the toothache had gone.

It was an odd company that sat down in room 13 of the Knickerbocker Cottage, in Sixth ave., N.Y. At thirty-nine minutes past 8 o'clock thirteen men, members of the Thirteen Club, lighted thirteen candles and proceeded to occupy thirteen chairs around a well-laden table in the above hostelry. While the dinner was being discussed Charles Sotheran, the scribe of the club, announced that he had received a play from Frederick Steinhausen, of Bavaria, entitled "Thirteenth," which would be produced a few months hence at a reception to be given by the club to its friends. He also stated that $13.13 had been sent to him by thirteen men in Manchester, Eng., for a charter for a Thirteen Club about to be established in that city. After the menu had been discussed, thirteen toasts were drank.—N. Y. Tribune.

FREE OF COST.

All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affliction of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at Hazen A. Spaulding's Drug Store and get a trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar size bottle will do.

A special edition of the B. & O. Book, with handsomely illuminated covers, is just out and a copy has been received at our office. It is entitled "How It Was Done," and is an account of the political revolution in ten of the principal states last fall. The fund of information contained in it is simply immense. The figures given are official, and collated strictly without partisan bias, being as it were merely tables of results, from which the reader must draw his own conclusions. The synopsis of the vote is given by counties, and compared with that of the previous election. Full lists are given of the representatives and senators from the different states, in the Forty-eight congress, and a list of the previous congress is given for comparison. It also contains valuable information concerning the great Baltimore and Ohio railroad, one of the favorite trunk lines from New York to Chicago and the west. The book will be forwarded to any address without charge, on application to C. K. Lord, Baltimore, Md.

When the ITEM boys (and girls) go sleigh riding they always say "catch on.—" Lynn Item. Thanks, friend. Your kindness is only exceeded by the distance you were from us when you made the remark.—*Peabody Corr. IMPORTANT TOTHE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

AN INVESTMENT

THAT PAYS 20 PER CENT.

AND FOR

ONE OF THE NECESSITIES OF LIFE.

EVERY MAN AND BOY

who resides in the New England States requires an Overgarment. The Naumkeag Clothing Company having on the counters about (600) six hundred of these valuable garments WILL CLOSE OUT the lot at Retail for about ONE HALF their value. The garments are all cut, made and trimmed in the latest style and will be as fashionable for the Fall and Winter of 1883 as at the present time. Our reasons for closing out all our Overgarments at a large discount is, we require the room for Spring and Summer Clothing. With our enormous salesroom of nearly (7000) seven thousand square feet we find it inadequate to meet the demands of our increasing trade.

It has always been our custom after the busy season to give our customers a "benefit" by offering a Mark Down Sale of fine and medium Clothing, but the fine quality and low prices of our goods, at this sale will eclipse anything ever before offered by any establishment in New England.

This sale will not only include all our overcoats and ulsters, but a large lot of Men's, Young Men's, Boys' and Children's Suits, Pantaloons and Heavy Underwear.

Our Overcoats include the following styles, Cheviots, Elysian Beavers, Chinchillas, Moscon Beavers, Seal Brown, Black and Blue English and German Beavers, Seal Brown Kerseys, Plain and Fancy Mixed Cassimeres, Plain and Fancy Olive Greens and Oxford Mixtures.

We shall offer at this great sale three special bargains in Overcoats.

LOT NO. 1.

A large lot of Men's and Young Men's Plain and Fancy Mixed Cassimere, Melton Cheviot and fine Beaver Overcoats marked down from $20. and $22. to $15.

LOT NO. 2.

A lot of Men's extra fine English and German Beaver, Seal Brown Kersey, Olive Green and Brown Mixed Cassimere and Worsted Overcoats—some of them cut extra long—all marked down from $23. and $25. to a uniform price of $18.00.

LOT NO. 3.

A large lot of Men's and Young Men's Overcoats and Ulsterettes. This lot comprises thirteen different patterns—all handsome stylish garments—have been retailed all the season for $15.00, $16.50 and $18.00. We have consolidated the lots and marked them all at $10.00 each—a bargain unparalleled.

We have also a lot of Men's Overcoats, prices ranging from $2.00 to $8.00.

One lot of men's heavy fine all wool ulsters marked down from $25. and $22. to $15.00

One lot of 50 ulsters prices ranging from $4.50 to $10.00.

Boys' and Children's Clothing at a TREMENDOUS DISCOUNT.

Continuation of the great mark down sale of Heavy Underwear. Heavy Undershirts and Drawers 25c, 35c, 50c, and 75c and $1.00

Men's Cardigan Jackets marked down to 62c, 87c and $1.00—a great bargain.

Men's Unlaundered Shirts, linen bosoms, marked down to 38, 45, 69 and 92 cts. each, the greatest bargain ever offered in Unlaundered Shirts.

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

THE GREATEST severity of the freshets in Ohio caused by the overflow of the banks of the river, has passed. It has been disastrous in the extreme. Attention has been drawn, now that the danger is largely over, to the influence which the forests have in preventing such overflows. It has been generally supposed that the destruction of the forests along the banks of the rivers is productive of such floods as has been just now the lot of Ohio to experience. Evidence of this is seen not only in our own country but in Europe. And yet there is some conflicting testimony in this regard. It is stated that the greatest floods except the present, took place in 1832 and 1847, before the timber was cut off, and that since that time there has been no appreciable increase in the regular depth of the river from year to year. As far as we can learn, however, this later freshet was more disastrous than any that have previously taken place; and while it will not be claimed that by the removal of the timber, a freshet should occur each year, the fact that it has occurred seems to go far towards establishing the correctness of the theory in favor of the preservation of the forests. There may have been other causes for the previous overflows; and it is also true that other causes on the Ohio river have had their part in contributing to the result. The waterway has been reduced by the building of bridge piers and wharfs; which occupy space which would otherwise relieve the pressure of the surplus water during a freshet. But in the main, Prof. Sargent's theory is borne out by the result. He says, in the North American Review for October, "It (the forest) prevents the water which has fallen from flowing away too rapidly over the surface of the ground; it protects springs; it delays the melting of snow; it checks evaporation and equalizes temperature; it breaks the force of destructivs winds; it holds the soil on the sides of steep mountain declivities and prevente it from washing into the valleys below. The flow of rivers in regions from which the forest covering has been removed is irregular and uncertain. Heavy rains flowing over the frozen surface of the ground, freed from the natural barrier which the trunks and roots of trees offer to rapid superficial flow, or snow, deprived of the shelter of the forest and melting suddenly, reach the stream so rapidly that it is unable to carry off the unusual volume of water: the banks are overflowed and finally destroyed, and destructive floods ensue. * * * * It is perhaps not too much to say that the highest claim for care and protection wnich the forest can make upon man lies in the power which it possesses to regulate and protect the the flow of rivers."

THE ROMANS had an ancient motto: "De mortuis nil nisi bonum,"—Of the dead say nothing but good. At first glance it would seem superfluous to emphasize the observance of the maxim. The grave should bury all animosities; the mantle of charity should cover all errors and omissions. It should be a pleasure to speak of the virtues of the deceased and to remember only their kind acts and generous motives. "Speak only good of the dead."

But we are recalled from this train of thought and reminded of the latin motto by an event which occurred last week—the funeral service of Charles R. Thorne, Jr. It seems that a solemn compact had been entered into by Thorne and two other friends, all being knights of the buskin, to prevent if possible the attendance of a clergyman at their funeral: and so as the remains of the great actor were to be placed in their last resting place, the surviving member of this original compact, Stuart Robson, was called to speak whatever of comfort and consolation was in his power to utter. It seemed as strange as it was sad to those who feel that the minister of Christ should be present at such a scene. And yet, when we are reminded of the origin of the compact, brought about because of the harsh and bitter words which had been uttered by clergymen at the graves of those who, like them, had been actors,—we can but stop and call to mind the words of the old Latin motto: "Speak only good of the dead."

THE CHEERY voice of the well known comedian uttered sentiments of which no friend of the deceased could be ashamed. But a violation of a custom, slight even though it be, at sucha time, jars upon the feelings and sensibilities of those by whom the departed is held dear. And all this is a sad commentary on the religion of Christ, as exemplified by those who must take the occasion to hold up, to ridicule and contempt the life of those who,like Thorne were members of the theatrical profession. Some minister of Christ is responsible for the compact, and the consequent violation of that custom which society has held, and rightly, to be a sacred duty.

The members of this profession are being more and more understood as time passes. As a rule they are no better and no worse than the same number of persons in other walks of life. Those who know them the least, are the least dispossd to be charitable of their faults. But in time of death, to speak harshly of the profession, to hold up the life of the deceased as a warning and an example to be avoided, is not wisdom, and we don't believe it is Christianity. "Of the dead speak nothing but good."

THE ANNUAL Town Report is now being printed, and from advance sheets we gather the following statistics which will be of interest to our readers. The net amount of expenditures for ordinary purposes during the year, including the interest on the debt of the town, is $78,719.49; the amount last year was $54,107.67. This does not include amounts paid for High service water, nor for the land or building of the new Town Hall. The expenses of the Poor Department have been $14,267 80 and the receipts $3,995.32. Last year the expenses were $11,620.58 and the receipts $4,367.95. The expenses of School Department have been $24,374.90, against $23,580.75 last year; of the Fire Department $10,048.34, against $6,304.21 last year. The receipts from Liquor Licenses have been $3,731.25; last year they were $1,312.50. The receipts from Water Rates have been $19,853.16, last year they were $17,523.03. The expenses of the water board for the year have been $8,584.72. The debt of the town is $363,786.49, against $295,481.58 Feb. 1, 1882, making an increase this year of $68,244.91. The resources of the town are $143,419.26, which includes a balance in the treasury of $70,-137.64, and the sinking fund of $51,-461.99. Of the town debt $223,000 represents the water loan, the interest on which is offset by the receipts from the water rates; $75,000 represents the town house loan; $37,000 the engine house loan, and $92,000 the school house loan. The valuation of the town property is $541,999, which includes the water works and the new unfinished town house and land. The interest on the town debt is $20,049.38, offset by the income of the water rates and a special appropriation of $3,000.

The statistics of the water board are interesting, showing that the high service water has nearly paid for its maintainance this year; and that, too, when only half a year or thereabouts, has elapsed since the water was turned on. Next year the town will have the benefit of the entire service, and it will yield a handsome revenue, it is fully believed. The total receipts for the year are $20,-313.16; the cost of maintainance was $8,584.72, and the interest for the year $12,143.20, making a total of $20,727.-92. The number of families supplied during the year was 1,210; stores and offices, 70; tanning and currying establishments, 53; private stables, 93; besides other supplies of varying nature. The board make no recommendation as to appropriation for the ensuing year, but intimate that the usefulness of the service can be extended or impaired by the amount of money which the town chooses to expend.

THE SALEM SCHUBERT CLUB have been invited by the authorities at the Danvers Insane Asylum to give a Concert to the patients. The Club will go on Friday evening of the week. Mr. Winch will conduct the concert and the event is likely to be a very pleasant one socially. The party go in Smith and Manning's barge sleighs.

SO. PEABODY.—Eliza J. Carleton departed this life last Sabbath morning, at the age of 37 years, 8 months, 13 days, after a lingering period of pain and weakness of fourteen years duration. Such a remarkable instance of uncomplaining suffering, yea, more. of cheerfulness in sickness, as her life presents, is seldom met with. For seven years, Miss Carleton was confined to her bed, her prostration attended often with excruciating pain; and the past seven years have been passed with suffering and weakness as constant companions. How the poor fragile body could endure so long the complicated forms of disease that sapped vitality and strength, is a mystery. But against this dark background the beautiful character of the sufferer stands out in bright and pleasing colors. She was patient; her long sickness brought no frown to her brow, and gave no peevish accent to her voice. There was no murmuring, no complaining. Her ills did not constitute the theme of her conversation. No one was wearied by the recital of her distresses. No one would gather from what she said how terrible were her sufferings. She was too much interested in others, and in all that was transpiring around her, to dwell in bitterness of spirit upon her own sad lot. She was hopeful and although physicians and attendants saw no chance for improvement, she did not despair; fully resigned to the will of God, she was ready to go at any moment, should Divine wisdom deem it best to withhold the strength for which she hoped. She had a sublime courage; though frail and weak in body, her buoyant spirit rose up to fight against the strong and subtle forces of disease that were slowly but surely gaining the mastery. Amid the waning of physical forces, the complicated forms of disease, the dissolution and decay that were going on, she was undaunted. In the presence of Death her soul seemed to take on new strength. Superadded to these virtues, and sanctifying all her character, was her strong, trusting faith. Though the blight of decay rested upon her young life, she found spiritual healing, and became the possessor of true life. The eye of her faith penetrated the darkness that gathered about her; beyond the confine of suffering she saw "the city which hath the foundations," and thitherward she pressed and at last entered in. What a transition from pain and weariness to rest and peace.

"Her glory is not of this shadowy slate,
Glory that with the fleeting season dies;
But when she entered at the sapphire gate,
What joy was radiant in celestial eyes!
How heaven's bright depths with sounding welcomes rung,
And flowers of heaven by shining hands were flung.
And He who, long before,
Pain, scorn and sorrow bore,
The mighty sufferer, with aspect sweet,
Smiled on the timid stranger from his seat;
He who returning, glorious, from the grave,
Dragged Death, disarmed, in chains, a crouching slave."

No pen can delineate the true character of the departed, a character as beautiful as it is rare. This mild and gentle life passed in the quiet sphere of home "Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife," has been disciplined by a severe experience, whereby it has developed into such perfection and beauty that a more excellent sphere was necessary for the display of its activities and graces; and so, she was "called up higher." As a fitting accompaniment to this experience of patient suffering, we have the faithful serving of the aged and devoted mother, whose ministry of love has been most beautiful and touching to behold. For this stricken mother and the remaining daughter there is heartfelt sympathy. The memory of such a character, disciplined and fitted here for the joy that is now its portion, lights up the sadness of this bereavement, even as the smile left upon the pale, still face of the dead lights up the darkened chamber of death. Such a memory should be treasured up, inspiring us by its lessons, to purer and hoher living.

The windows of the church have been placed in position. They are a very pretty design, and set the building off very nicely.

A very interesting prayer meeting was held at the church last Sunday evening, consisting of bible readings and singing.

Wm. Felt, brother of Chas. Felt, of West Peabody, was buried in the Needham burying ground last Tuesday. He was formerly a shoe manufacturer in Lynn.

Mr. Hiram Bryant recently had a cat sent him from Maine which much resembles a coon. It is black and white, has very soft, glossy hair and quite a bushy tail. The hair around the neck, breast and fore legs is quite long and straight. It is quite a curiosity and is real good natured.

Another of those pleasant parties given by the members of Hose Company No. 5, was held at their hall last Friday evening and was well attended. Music was furnished by Upton & Tiney's band.

The recent rain storm and the fog of Saturday caused an unusual flow of water in our streets. In most of them the surplus water was taken by the gutters but on that of Washington and Lynnfield streets the rushing torrents reminded one of a river as it spread across the street.

The So. Peabody dramatic club meets in school house hall next Friday evening. A full attendance is requested.

Edward E. Taylor has so far recovered as to be able to ride out.

Peabody parties are making preparations for the building of a boat house at Spring pond.

Perley Galeucia is confined to the house with erysipelas.

Mrs. Rusha P. Gay, the principal of our school, is ill, and has been compelled to relinquish teaching for the present. Her place is temporarily filled by Miss Emory of the Bowditch school.

NORTH PEABODY.—Mr. James N. Ames and family are on a visit to Alton Bay, N. H.

Mr. L. C. Hanson has not gone to Florida, but has gone to Kansas City, Missouri.

Messrs. W. P. Barker, Elijah Wilson, and J. F. Dale have gone to Florida with the intention of investing in lands.

We are pleased to say (after an illness of some months) we again behold the familiar face of Mr. T. J. Osborn in his stable, and hope soon to see him again on the streets.

We regret to learn of the serious illness of Mr. Eben Hooper and three of his children and his wife's mother with scarlet fever and throat distemper. At the present writing, they are all improving.

Obituaries.

Mr. Charles W. Brine died Monday evening at about eleven o'clock. His death was not unexpected, a disease of a cancerous nature having confined him to his house for about a year. Some few months since he suffered the amputation of his foot, hoping thereby that his life would be spared. But the poison had become so infused into his blood that it was impossible for him to rally. Mr. Brine came to Peabody about 1856, and entered the employ of William T. Dole. After working some time at his trade of carriage making, he started for himself. He carried on the carriage business at first in connection with the shop of the late William Smith, he who the blacksmith work. He then moved to Foster street, in the Houston shop, where he did blacksmith as well as carriage work. He was burned out and then removed to his late quarters, where until his illness he was doing a successful business. Mr. Brine was a member of various insurance organizations, having a policy in the American Legion of Honor for $5000,—the first death in this organization in this vicinity—also $1000 in the Salem Mutual Benefit Association, $3000 in the Equitable Aid Union, and $3000 in the Royal Arcanum, making $12,000 in all. His funeral will take place to-morrow (Thursday) afternoon, at 2 P. M., from his late residence.

Miss Hattie A. Foss died Sunday evening, of consumption. Miss Foss had been ill for about seven months; she had a severe hemorrhage Saturday evening, and grew weaker until Sunday when she passed quietly and peacefully into the beyond. She was a graduate of the Peabody High School, when very young, and had a large circle of acquaintances and friends. Her father, the late Charles E. Foss, died eight years previous, lacking one day, his death occurring in the 19th and his daughter's on the 18th. She was a member of the Sabbath school of the Universalist church. Her funeral was attended this afternoon, Rev. Mr. Sprague officiating. Her age was 21 years, 7 months, 13 days.

Mrs. Sarah W., widow of the late George Osborne, passed away Sunday morning, at the good old age of seventy six years. She was a daughter of the late Capt. Thomas Whittridge, of Salem, who resided at 179 Federal street. The death of her husband but a short time ago, is fresh in the memory of our readers. One by one the aged and venerable people of our midst are being called home. Mrs. Osborne was loved and respected by all who knew her. She leaves a son, Dr. Geo. S. Osborne, and a daughter, the wife of M. W. Shepard, Esq. of Salem. Her funeral took place yesterday forenoon, Rev. Mr. Hudson officiating.

Miss Sarah M., daughter of the late Thomas and Harriet (Merrill) Stimpson, died last Monday night, at her late residence 48 Lowell St. of consumption. She was a sister to Thomas M. Stimpson Esq. Her age was fifty years 5 mos. 10 days. Her funeral took place this afternoon.

Happy is the death of a Christian, who, in peace with God and all mankind, closes his eyes on the vanities and evanescent glories of this cold, false world, to open them in the resplendence of the Lord.—Francis Nugent.

Michael S. Nugent passed away last Saturday morning, after an illness of eight days. Mr. Nugent was a native of Ireland, being born in the city of Limerick. He received a good common school education, and was a great reader. When he was quite young, his parents removed to Tallow Co., Waterford, where his uncle, Richard Nugent, carried on a large and extensive leather manufactory; he was apprentice to his uncle and served the required time thereat. About forty years ago he came to America and worked at his trade in New York and Newark. Thirty years ago, he came to Peabody, where he permanently settled. He was one of the oldest of our Catholic citizens; a kind and faithful husband, a fond and loving father and a devout and zealous Christian. His funeral took place Monday morning. High Mass of Requiem was celebrated at St. John's Church, by Rev. M. J. Masterson. He leaves a wife, daughter and two sons (Nugent Bros.) to mourn his loss.

The Boston DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March, 1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. They have moved into their new quarters Nos. 246 and 248 Washington street, and on Monday issued a 20 page sheet containing a complete history of their enterprise to the present time. The Advertiser has long been the leading Boston Daily with mercantile men, for the reliability of its market and other reports.

We would call especial attention to the beautiful new soda apparatus that has been lately placed in the Union Patent Medicine Co.'s store, 289 Essex St. This firm seems to be enterprising and energetic, and doing all it can to reduce prices and put drugs and medicines on an equitable basis. This fountain is of a new and unique design, with all modern improvements.—Salem Register.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

We announced in last week's issue the death of Rev. C. H. Salsman, who was a resident of our town for some years, and who was favorably known to many of our citizens, since which we have been informed of the following in relation to him. He was born in Nova Scotia, and came to Peabody about thirteen years ago. He worked for some time at the carriage factory of Pike & Whipple, and was highly respected by his employers. He had cherished a strong desire from his earliest years to secure a liberal education, and this desire ripened into the purpose in 1871. In the fall of that year he went to Waterville, Me., and entered the Classical Institute, where he spent three years in preparation for College. In the fall of 1874 he entered Colby University in the same town, and graduated in 1878. He was a thorough and conscientious student, and in the public exhibitions bore off the most of the highest honors. He was President of his graduation class. He entered Newton Theological Institute in 1878, and graduated there in 1881. He sustained the same high reputation here that he did in College, and was regarded as one of the ablest men in his class. He went to Lebanon, Ohio, in the fall of 1881, and was ordained as pastor of the East Baptist church. He labored earnestly for a few months, and was then stricken down with a severe and prolonged illness. He came East last summer greatly shattered in health, but returned to his labors again in the fall. But he was unequal to the task, and soon after Christmas was again stricken down with a mortal illness. His death resulted from consumption, though its immediate cause was pneumonia of the right lung. The churches in the town united in the funeral service, which was held in the church where he had had his short but earnest ministry. He was brought East for burial, and the final services were held in Lisbon Falls, Me., the home of his wife's family. The services were conducted by Rev. C. V. Hanson, his pastor in this place for many years. He joined the Baptist church here by letter, and was by this church licensed to preach the gospel. He had many friends in our community, and was held in high esteem for his manliness and high Christian character. He leaves a widow and one child, a daughter born in August last. His friends here who took a just pride in his course, will be pained to learn of his early death. In the Baptist church especially where he was for many years a beloved and faithful member, his loss will be deeply felt.

We find in the Odd Fellows' Herald the following in reference to the late T. B. Elliott, a relative of the late Isaac B. Elliott of this town, and who was one of the victims of the Milwaukee fire:—He became a member of the Grand Lodge and Grand Encampment of his jurisdiction in 1870 and successfully passed through the chairs of every elective office in the latter, being chosen Grand Representative in 1878 and re-elected to the same office in 1880. The general sentiment of the members of the Grand Encampment seems to justify us in the belief that he would have been retained in office, as long as he desired, had life not been cut short by the late terrible disaster. Bro. Elliott distinguished himself in the Sovereign Grand Lodge by his unceasing efforts in behalf of a Degree for Uniformed Patriarchs, and the adoption of such a degree at the late session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge was largely due to his influence. He was one of the members of the committee which prepared the degree, and the first Camp instituted in his State bears his name. Bro. Elliott was one of the shining intellectual luminaries of the Order, and his sad death casts a gloom over the entire brotherhood. He was a good man and noble Odd Fellow, whose place in the fraternity will be filled with difficulty.

The Commissioners of state aid have issued a circular calling the attention of municipal officers to the importance of making a careful examination of the physical and pecuniary condition of the soldiers and sailors receiving aid under chapters 301 and 252, acts of 1879, now consolidated in chapter 30 of the public statutes, urging that the pension certificates of the men be examined during the first quarter of each year to detect changes likely to occur, and making various suggestions as to the disbursements of state military aid. The circular is endorsed by Gov. Butler.

The next institute of the Essex Agricultural Society will be held in Salem, March 13. In the forenoon J. S. Russell, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, will speak of the Agriculture of Massachusetts. In the afternoon Dr. J. R. Nichols will speak of fertilizers, especially nitrogen and its services.

"G. S." Cigars—all the rage—nothing like them—at George Stevens'.

About sixty people were present at the Town Hall this afternoon, when the hearing began upon the subject of granting the proposed horse railroad a right to locate on Washington street.—This number was afterwards largely increased. Mr. Southwick, chairman of the Selectmen, made a brief statement of the position of affairs, and called for an expression of opinion from any present, asking those opposed to speak first. S. C. Bancroft spoke strongly in favor of the road.: Mr. Breed, President of the Lynn & Boston R. R., in reply to a question, stated that he would be satisfied to locate in the center of Washington street, that he expected they would be justified in running fourteen trips each way, daily, and that the track would be paved and kept in good order. Hon. Mr. Abbott spoke briefly in favor of the road, but was opposed to its location on Washington street, as was also Obadiah Kimball and Rufus H. Brown. The grounds of opposition were that Foster street was just as valuable as Washington street, and that it was dangerous to have a curve near the old monument. Stephen Blaney spoke strongly in favor of the road, and of the track being laid through Washington street, from the fact of its great convenience to the public and of creating more taxable property in South Peabody. Hon. S. F. Blaney made remarks, showing that he was heartily in favor not only of the road, but of the Washington street route. Rev. J. W. Colwell of South Peabody spoke briefly on the affirmative side. On motion of Geo. Randall, seconded by S. F. Blaney, a vote was taken to ascertain the sentiment of those present, who by this time filled the hall, and it was unanimously voted in favor of the road to and through Washington street by a second track to the Square.

Last Sunday evening a concert of unusual interest was held at the Orthodox vestry. The subject was, "The Old and New Year," and appropriate recitations were given by the younger members of the school, imparting much instruction to both old and young. The reports of the Superintendent, Mr. B. N. Moore, and of the Treasurer, R. H. Wilkinson, were read and from them we learn that the membership is 331, divided into 30 classes, 9 officers, 33 teachers and 289 scholars. Fifty-two sessions of the school have been held out of 53 Sundays during the year. The average attendance was 196, the largest being 257 on December 24th, and the smallest being 85 on August 13th. Three scholars were present every Sabbath and three were absent only one Sabbath. During the year 167 have signed the temperance pledge. The amount raised for benevolent work by classes was $358.25. The largest class collection was $30.08 and the smallest $3.26. This money was distributed for missionary work in our own and foreign lands. The expenses of the school have been $249.12. The total amount received was $616.24, and the amount expended was $598.78, leaving a balance in the treasury. The school at the present time is in a very prosperous condition.

The private assembly at Upton's Hall last evening, was undoubtedly a very pleasant, enjoyable and successful affair. There was a goodly number present who participated. Music was furnished by the Salem Cadet Orchestra, whose enlivening strains added to the pleasure of the dancers. While the toilets of all the ladies were attractive and tasteful, many of them were rich and elaborate, and most of the gentlemen appeared in full evening dress. The floor was under the efficient management of Messrs. John P. Ward, George R. Nelson, George R. Felt, Jr., John E. Newhall. The programme of dances consisted of thirteen numbers, besides several figures of the German, closing at a seasonable hour with the waltz. The success of this party depended almost entirely on the efforts of Miss Mamie Harris, who must feel pleased at the result.

One of our readers hands us the following on himself. "The other day while on our way to the meat market for a breakfast steak, we were met by quite a well dressed stranger who doubtless quickly diagnosed our smelling organ, and judging from its brilliant color, superinduced by hard cold concluded that we like himself were a lover of the "conscience-slayer," and were on our way to the saloon for a morning drink. Suiting the action to this conclusion he quickly hailed us and asked for the loan of a nickel with which to get a drink of whiskey. We lost no time in telling him that he misjudged our looks and over sized our pile, for we had no money to invest in whiskey for ourselves, neighbors, or strangers." As a protection, our friend should after this, whenever forced to market before breakfast, do as the ladies do, powder his nose.

Quite a number of our citizens and their wives attended the meeting of the Liberal Club, last evening, in Salem.—The subject was "Church Music." Two essays were first presented, one from the standpoint of the pulpit, by Rev. Mr. Hosmer, the other from the pew, by an author who did not desire to be known, and whose essay was read by Rev. Dr. Bolles. William Agge was then introduced, and argued very forcibly in favor of a chorus instead of quartette singing in our churches, illustrating his theory by some fine selections, rendered in a masterly manner, by a trained chorus. Mendelssohn's Morning Prayer showed the effect which could be produced, under careful direction, and a hymn, "Worthington," introduced a solo feelingly rendered by Mrs. Bigelow. At the close of this part of the entertainment, the quartette side of Church Music was given by Dr. A. M. Dudley, and illustrated by selections by the choir at Barton Square Church, of which he is director. Dr. Dudley claimed that no church in Salem could get together or support such a chorus as had just performed, selected, as it was, from the Oratorio Society, Schubert Club, and several choirs, while his illustration was by an ordinary quartette in one of our poverty stricken churches. This happy hit was received with applause, and some fine selections were given, with Miss Clark at the piano.—The rendition, by a female quartette, "Their sun shall no more go down," was the gem of the evening, given without accompaniment by Miss Grace F. Dalton, Mrs. J. Henry Osgood, Miss Minnie K. Felt and Mrs. F. C. Ferguson. Extra cars were run to Peabody.

Last Monday evening two barges numbering about fifty people from the Bethel Church, Lynn, surprised Mr. Neil Shaw of this town at his residence on Pleasant street. Mr. Shaw extended the hospitality of his home to the party and the evening was socially spent, interpersed with singing and instrumental music. During the evening Mr. Geo. L. Drake, superintendent of the Bethel Sabbath School in behalf of the company presented Mr. Shaw with a handsome hanging lamp with a hand-painted shade. Mr. Shaw gracefully responded and about ten o'clock invited the company to partake of a bountiful collation. Shortly before midnight the company dispersed having enjoyed a very pleasant time.

The first accident that has occurred during the erection of the new town hall took place last Saturday. A workman in the employ of Sweet & Co., tinsmiths, of Boston, was sitting upon an empty nail keg on the staging which runs across from truss to truss. As he was putting on his overalls, the keg tipped and he fell about 33 feet. He struck a portion of the balcony which broke the force of his fall, and he was removed to his home. It was found that no bones was broken, and he was shortly about his work again. It was a narrow escape.

The objection of the secret service men to the new five cent coin, which they claim could be made to resemble a five dollar gold piece by gilding, has, it is reported, caused the treasury department to order an immediate suspension of further coinage. This report caused a number of brokers and others to send orders to Philadelphia for the purchase of all that could be secured of those in circulation. The fact that that one side of the new five-cent pieces is a fac-simile of a five-dollar gold piece is sufficient, to make the issue a dangerous one.

The recent storms of snow, mixed with fine rain, have filled up the rain-water gutters under the eaves, on the northerly and easterly sides of our houses, with snow saturated with water where it has frozen into solid ice and caused the water of later thaws to turn into the houses, and damage the plastered and papered walls. The gutters ought to be put on some how so that this trouble could not happen. Old fashioned houses without gutters are never troubled in that way.

Holton Lodge, I. O. O. F., will celebrate the fifth anniversary of the re-institution of their Lodge at Upton's Hall, Thursday evening, March 1. The exercises will consist of music both vocal and instrumental, to be followed by a supper and dancing. The Salem Band Orchestra will furnish the music. Brothers of the order who wish tickets can obtain them of either of the elective officers previous to next Saturday.

The Salem Oratorio Society, it is now announced, have given up their original intention of going to Lowell and uniting with the society of that city in the presentation of Gounod's Redemption. On the contrary the Lowell Society have signified their willingness to join the Salem Society in the latter city, and if a sufficient guarantee fund can be obtained the Salem Oratorio Society will bring it out in April. It is to be hoped they will be successful.

Mrs. M. O. Stevens of this town has been appointed on the committee on lectures in the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society.

LIVE WORM IN A HORSE'S EYE.

A case of parasitism somewhat rare in this country is attracting attention in Jersey City. About three months ago a driver in the employ of Dodge & Bliss noticed a worm in the eye of one of his horses. It was then about one inch long, and black. Now it is three inches long, and white.

Mr. W. H. Arrowsmith, of the American Veterinary College, tells the Sun:

"The disease is one seldom seen here. It is called in the books filaria oculi, and is very prevalent in warm climates, in India, Australia, and in Arabia. It is supposed to be due to germs taken into the body when the animal is feeding upon grass in low, marshy ground. The germs or eggs of the parasite are developed into the life of a worm, and the worm penetrates to different parts of the body, sometimes to the eye, sometime to the brain, sometimes interior organs. But it has been so seldom seen either in Europe or here that comparatively little is known of its progress, development, or results. There have been, I believe, but four or five cases reported in both Europe and this country. When fully developed, as it is in the eye of the horse of Dodge & Bliss, it is a parasitic white worm, varying from one to three inches in length, and about as thick as an ordinary pin. While in the aqueous humors of the eye it is in continual motion. When I examined it by means of the ophthalmoscope, I found it in the anterior or aqueous chamber of the eye. It was very active. The corner of the eye was somewhat opaque, and the iris somewhat distended. By careful observation we could discern a granular surface upon the anterior face of the crystalline lens. The horse otherwise was in perfect health. He works, and does not show any apparent inconvenience, with the exception of a certain nervousness during examination of the eye. The activity of the parasite is such at present that it is impossible to say whether it has a head or tail, or what its internal construction may be. But, from microscopic observation, we will probably be able to discover head, tail, and alimentary canal. According to Percival's 'Hippo-pathology' and 'Williams' Veterinary Surgeon,' even the sex of these parasites is clearly discernable under the microscope. I do not believe that this parasite is ever found in human beings, but only in grass-eating animals that have grazed in low, marshy ground; and that it is in the eye is only a matrer of accident in the conrse of its penetration of the body of the horse."

DEXTROUS TOES AND USELESS FINGERS.

One of the most curious and interesting proof of what human study, ingenuity and perseverance can accomplish, even in the face of natural disadvantages, is shown in the person and accomplishments of Miss Lizzie L. Sturgeon, a native of Carlisle, Pa. The young lady's hands are dependent upon her, but they are now, as they have been from infancy, inactive, and she is dependent upon her feet and toes for services ordinarily manual. Miss Sturgeon embroidered with zephyr upon perforated cardboard the motto, "Remember Me." She threaded her needle with as much apparent ease and surely as dextrously as the average modern housewife. She wrote in a verry pretty "hand" her name on a card, and held the pen between her toes. The scissors were wielded with equal ease and steadiness. After many interesting expositions of her ability, she turned to an upright piano and played some simple sacred melodies, striking the chords with but one or two false notes and keeping good time. Miss Sturgeon is, in her demeanor and personality, something different from the ordinary museum curiosity. While her affliction naturally creates sympathy in the observer, the feeling quickly gives way to admiration for her self-helpfulness. —Exchange.

THE CONDUCT OF THE CORPSE.

Not long ago a widow stood at the side door of a baggage car watching the stowage of her husband's corpse. As she turned away another lady, also in mourning, appeared with a dog, which was intrusted to the care of the baggage master.

Several times, as the train stopped at stations, the owner of the dog approached the car with solicitious interrogatories about the brute's condition, until the patience of the baggage functionary was about exhausted. At length the widow sidled up to him and asked if her poor dear was all right.

'Yes, confound him!" growled the baggage-master, without looking around. "And another time you ship your poor dear over this road he goes by freight. I don't mind helping a woman, but I won't have no saffron-colored beast of obscure ancestry spewing around the floor of this car and howling for—"

Just then he turned and saw his blunder.

"I beg your pardon, ma'am," he continued, stammering. "I thought yours was the dog. I take it all back, ma'am. The corpse has acted like a perfect gentleman." —Drake's Traveler's Magazine.

HONESTY REWARDED.

A young telegraph operator at Lachine, near Montreal, Canada, found a package floating in the river there the other day. On opening it he was surprised to find that it contained two hundred and seventy dollars in bank-bills. On making inquiry, it turned out that a clergyman had lost the package from a steamer, and had abandoned all hope of ever seeing it again. The clergyman handsomely rewarded the honest operator.

IN WHAT WAY A PREVALENT EVIL MAY BE SHORN OF ITS POWER TO HARM.

Malaria is a broad name for many diseases—all originating in blood poisoning. Bilious fever, the typhus and typhoid fevers and chills and fever are prominent members of the family. Malaria defies alike the builders, the plumbers and the physicians. Despairing of ordinary treatment, the latter almost unanimously recommend BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER as the greatest anti-malarial specific of the age. These plasters act upon the liver, spleen, bowels and kidneys. Worn over the region of the liver, and upon the back over the kidneys, they ward off malaria like an armor. No other plasters do this.

When you purchase, satisfy yourself that the word CAPCINE is cut in the center of the plaster.

THE NAMES OF THE STATES.

New Hampshire gets its name from Hampshire, England. Massachusetts is derived from an Indian name, first given to the bay, signifying "near the great hills." Rhode Island has an obscure origin, the Island of Rhodes, the "Island of the Rhodes," and a Dutch origin, "Red Island," the first seeming to have the best historical support. Connecticut is an Indian name, signifying "land on a long tidal river." Virginia, the Carolinas and Georgia have a royal origin. Maine was named from the fact that it was supposed to contain the "mayne portion" of New England. Vermont has no especial question, except that it is claimed to have been first an alias—New Connecticut, alias Vermont. Kentucky probably signifies either "a dark and bloody ground," or a "bloody river," or "the long river." Tennessee comes from its river, the name being derived from the name of an Indian village on the river—"Tanassee." Ohio is named after an Indian name, signifying "something great," with an accent of admiration. Indiana comes from the name of an early land party. Illinois comes from the Indian—a name of a tribe. Michigan is claimed to mean "lake country;" it probably came from the name of the lake, "Great Lake," which bore this name before the land adjacent was named. Louisiana is from the French. Arkansas and Missouri are from the Indian, the former being doubtful; the latter is claimed to mean in its origin "muddy water," which described the river. Iowa is also Indian with double meaning. Texas is popularly thought to be Indian, but may be Spanish. Florida is Spanish, "a flowery land." Oregon has a conjectural origin. It is probably Indian, but a Spanish origin is claimed. California comes from a Spanish romance of 1510. Nevada takes its name from the mountains, who get theirs from a resemblance to the Nevadas of South America. Minnesota is Indian, "sky-tinted water." Nebraska is variously rendered "shallow water," and "flat country." Kansas is from an Indian root, Kaw, corrupted from the French. Missssippi is "great water," or "whole water." Alabama is Indian, the name of a fortress, and a tribe, signifying, as is claimed, "here we rest."

WEIGHT OF A MILLION DOLLARS.

Ask any man if he would carry one million dollars in gold were he made a present of that amount, and he would say yes. And yet what does it weigh? Mr. Elliot, the Government Actuary, has computed the weight of one million dollars in gold and silver coin, as follows: The standard gold dollar of the United States contains of gold of nine-tenths fineness 25.8 grains, and the standard silver dollar contains of silver of nine-tenths fineness 412.5 grains. One million standard gold dollars consequently weigh 25,800,000 grains, or 53,750 ounces troy, or 4,497 1-6 pounds troy, of 5,766 grains each, or 3,685.71 pounds avordupois, of 7,000 grains each, or 1834-1000 "short" tons, of 2,000 pounds avordupois each, or 1645-1000 "long" tons, of 2,240 pounds avordupois each. One million standard silver dollars weigh 412,500,000 grains, or 850,875 ounces troy, or 71,614.50 pounds troy, or 58,828.57 pounds avordupois, or 29464-1,000 "short" tons, of 2,000 pounds avordupois each, or 26307-1,000 "long" tons, of 2,240 pounds avordupois each. In round numbers the following table represents the weight of one million dollars in the coins named: Standard gold coin, 1⅔ tons; standard silver coin, 26¾ tons; subsidiary silver coin, 25 tons; minor coin, five-cent nickel, 100 tons.

A BELGIAN POSTMAN.

A Belgian who has money owing to him often hands the bill to his postman, who passes it through the office, to be presented to the debtor in whatever locality the latter may reside, and, if payment be made, the creditor receives it from his postman on the following day, with but a trifling deduction for commission. As to newspapers, almost all regular subscribers to a journal pay their money to the postman, and two or three days' before the subscription expires that active official presents the quittance d'abonnement for the renewal of the subscription during a fresh term. All this makes of the Belgian postman a kind of ambulating general agency and bank of deposit, and the man is obliged to have a desk slung in front of him and to carry a locked and chained portfolio under his arm for valuables, but he gets through his work satisfactorily, because his beats are shorter than those of his English brother, and, at times when there is a great press of work, he is always accompanied by a supernumerary.

A SHORT STOP.

A promising youth of about five summers, being about to retire for the evening, was asked by his mother to kneel by her side and repeat the Lord's prayer. The little chap, whose mind was evidently intent on the beauties of the national game, having reached the middle of the prayer, paused, looked into his mother's face and exclaimed: "Billy Brown is a boss short-stop," and proceeded with his devotions as if nothing unusual had transpired.—Boston Post.

When upon a trial a man calls witnesses to his character, and those witnesses only say that they never heard, nor do not know, anything ill of him, it intimates at best a neutral and insignificant character.

Earthly greatness is such a nice thing, and requires so much chariness in the managing as the contentment of it cannot require.

DURING THE LATE WAR

THE GOVERNMENT MADE ITS BEST ARMS AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS — WHAT MR. DAVID CLARK, INSPECTOR U. S. ARMORY THERE RECOMMENDS.

Your reporter found Inspector Clark at his office on the Armory grounds busily examining "receivers" for the regulation army rifles. However, he was as willing to say a word for the merits of health and strength restoratives as to prove the merits of implements of death. He said: "My business keeps me closely confined to the Armory and indoors. As a result, I've suffered considerably from indigestion and biliousness, but I find that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is a most excellent medicine for these complaints. I most cordially recommend it, for I am acquainted with its worth. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is used a great deal by the machinists in the U. S. Armory here."

While FAVORITE REMEDY is a specific in Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders and Constipation of the Bowels. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, FAVORITE REMEDY, he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. feb14—1m

New York Mercury for 1883.

Fully equipped with the finest printing machinery of the world, capable of working off 30,000 copies per hour, the NEW YORK MERCURY will enter upon its

FORTY-FIFTH VOLUME,

commencing January 6, 1883, with a determination to more than ever merit the liberal patronage which has marked its career for nearly half a century. Arrangements have been consummated, both at home and in Europe, to secure for the ensuing year many sterling novelties to increase the already incomparable variety of literary attractions which have always made the NEW YORK MERCURY a welcome guest in every home circle.

REDUCED RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

But in order to enhance the already widespread circulation of the NEW YORK MERCURY, the proprietor has determined to reduce the annual subscription rate for 1883 from Three Dollars to Two Dollars and Fifty Cents per annum, thus making it the largest, handsomest, cheapest and best family paper in the United States. Each subscriber will get comprising more than 15,000 lines of choice literature in each issue—equaling the contents of a 35 cent magazine!

THE NEW YORK MERCURY

will be mailed, postage free, for six months, for $1.25, or three months for 75 cents. Sample copies sent when requested. Address

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, ladies, and children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg. Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly, FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired. Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

WINDING UP THE CLOCK,

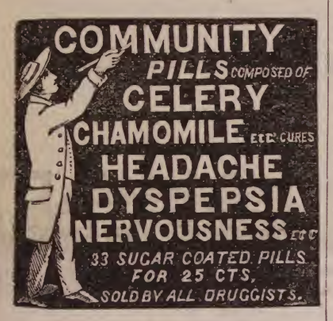
WHEN THE WEARY WHEELS WERE ALMOST STILL, A LUCKY ACCIDENT REVEALS THE LOST KEY.

"How long did you say you had it?"

"Twenty-five years."

"What! a bad cough, with occasional attacks of hemorrhage, for twenty five years? Why, man, it's a mercy that there's a dozen pounds left of you."

Abraham Orner, of Highspire, Dauphin County, Pa., stuck to his statement, and when the exclamations of wonder ceased, he added:



"Exactly. You're right. It is a mercy.—But the greatest mercy of all is that before I actually coughed myself out of existence I got hold of PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and a few bottles cured me."

"Cured you? Relieved you, you mean."

"I mean what I say; it cured me," said Mr. Orner, simply. "I feel like another man."

Please take especial notice: PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger; not a mere stomachic. The ordinary preparations of ginger are beneficial for transient aches, but at that point their value ends.—PARKER'S GINGER TONIC covers a far wider and totally different field. It attacks and dissipates radical and chronic diseases of the Lungs, Kidneys, Liver and Nerves. It is as delicious to the palate as it is prompt and effective in operation. Ginger is only one among many powerful curatives which the TONIC holds in combination. Test its virtue for that cough of yours, or for any of the ills which require an invigorant for the whole system.

And above all, do not permit yourself to be misled. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC stands alone. Nothing else is "just the same," or "just as good." Prices 50c. and $1. Economy in buying the larger size. HISCOX & CO., New York. feb14—1m

BANKS.

There are a great many kinds of banks in the world. The most important are the banks that generously receive your money and take care of it for you, and some of them take care that you never see it again.

There are various ways of getting money out of a bank. One is to draw a check on the bank; another to draw a revolver on the cashier. The latter was the favorite method employed by the late lamented Jesse James, and the draft was generally honored.

When a corporation desires to open a bank they take out a charter, but a burglar takes out a jimmy. It is a fine thing to have a big balance in a solvent bank. It is then like a roomy boot, easy to draw on. But if the bank be shaky, a clear head and a careful step are of no special advantage to a depositor; he is liable to lose his balance.

Banks of deposit, banks of discount and savings banks are most numerous. The banks of Deposit (N. Y.) are all right for anything that we know to the contrary. If you want your note discounted, any bank will do it for you. They may require some little preliminary, though, such as the autograph of a wealthy man in the neighborhood on the back of it—not necessarily for publication, but as a guaranty of good faith.

The savings banks of the country have been of great benefit to the poor. The poor, as is well known, are prone to squander vast sums of money. Savings banks take their loose change and invest it for them in the most permanent manner. In thousands of instances, poor people have put every cent they had in a savings bank, whose officers have invested it so skillfully that the depositors have never been able to get hold of it again, no matter how anxious they might be to spend it. A great temptation is thereby removed—to Canada or Europe.

There are other banks besides money banks. The banks of Newfoundland receive deposits in the way of fogs—bank of fog-et-me-nots, as it were. Then there are the "banks and braes o' bonny Doon," that Burns sings of. The braes would seem to indicate that there was a mule pasture in the vicinity.

The faro bank receives extensive deposits in our large cities. The depositors are chiefly little chips of fellows who not only put in their own earnings, but very accommodatingly act as agents for their employers, without consulting them on the matter, however. They don't seek a man to have a draft drawn on, they go direct to the drawer.

Finally, there are banks of care and banks of trouble in this world, and we cannot expect to be entirely clear of them until our feet are safely planted on Jordan's banks.—Cin. Sat. Night.

AN AWKWARD MISTAKE.

A very awkward mistake was made in Southwark, England. A lady who was deaf and dumb, and a foreigner who had but a smattering of English, presented themselves at St. George's Church, in Southwark, for the purpose of being married, Neither could make the clergyman understand very clearly what they wanted. The two took it for granted that the clergyman would marry them, it seems, while on the other hand, the clergyman supposed they wanted to join the church, or, as they say in England, they wanted to be "churched." So the two old people were taken into the church, going through the regular form of admission, They, however, supposed they were married, and went joyfully back to the inn where they were staying. As soon as they got to the inn, they sent the clergyman a piece of cake, with a note pinned to it, saying, "Please accept a bit of the wedding-cake of Monsieur —— and Madame ——." Then the clergyman understood it all, and at once hurried to the inn to rectify the mistake. The couple returned to the church, and were married that time sure enough.

LEFT IT IN THE HACK.

"Now, don't forget, dear, to order that load of coal to day," she said, and as he kissed her good-bye, he assured her that he would not fail to attend to it. Of course he forgot all about it before he was half-way down town.

At the store he was visited by some country customers whom he thought it advisable to entertain, so he took them to the Zoological Garden to see the animals; showed them about generally and finally brought up at home in a hack about 2:30 a. m.

"You didn't order that coal," were his wife's greeting words.

"Oh, yesh did! Yesh did! (hic) Got it about me, bet yer life," said he, feeling in his pockets and vainly trying to remember what his wife was talking about.

"Don't shee wha's come of it. Lemme shee," meditatively, and then brightening up. "Az wha's matter, lef' tout in (hic) hack."—Cin. Sat. Night.

A Louisville saloon keeper sued a customer for drinks. The Justice asked him if he had kept an account. He had. Would he bring it into court? He would. After a few minutes' absence he lugged in a door, on which the drinker's debt was recorded in chalk, each long mark meaning a ten-cent drink and each short mark a five-cent drink. It was admitted as evidence.

Know the true value of time; snatch, seize and enjoy every moment of it. No idleness, no laziness, no procrastination. Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.

Power, in its quality and degree, is the measure of manhood. Scholarship, save by accident, is never the measure of a man's power.

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other Liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it

J. E. Bruorton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

COLOGNE

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March 1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

ADVICE TO TRAVELING AGENTS.

Check your baggage.

Never sell goods in a place where the merchants won't buy. Call around again sometime when they will.

Don't try to make a mash on a lonesome looking young woman on the train until you are sure her husband isn't in the smoking car wrestling with a five-cent Connecticut Havana.

Never ask a blessing at a hotel table. You might be mistaken for a minister. In a private house you may venture, and if you can't think of anything else, simply say, "Lord have mercy on these victuals. Amen."

Be gallant at all times and never forget to offer services to the prettiest woman in the car. Put a window up or down for her, give her a newspaper, ask her how far she is going, and when she will get there, and so on. A woman always likes this sort of attention.

Never stop in a wicked town over Sunday.

When you meet a man in your line, always quote your prices to him twenty-five per cent. below cost, and make him sick.

Don't drink. It's better to go thirsty and save a dime than to get into the station house. P. S. If you must drink, take a whisky sour; it is good for the liver and kidneys.

Always stop at the best hotel and be sure to tell the chambermaids the number of your room so you may be called in case of fire. It inpairs a man's usefulness if he neglects this precaution, and has to be shoveled out of the ruins in the shape of ashes, suspender buckles and pants buttons.

When you return to your house, always assume a tired look and talk about the weariness of life.

When you meet your customers in town, take them to the Y. M. C. A., and after that —"whazzer mazzer wi' yer, what'er yer givin' uz ?"

If you travel south, give the Yankee's the devil, and if north, shake the bloody shirt.

If you have to sit up till nineteen or twenty o'clock waiting for a train don't get mad, but go out and chat with a girl till the old man comes down and sets the dog on you.

Never tell a lie—unless the truth is entirely unfitted for the emergencies of the case.

Don't sell a man goods on four months' time and date his bill three months in advance. This takes time, not by the forelock, but by the seat of the breeches and only gives you five months until the year is up.

When you have "excess baggage" carry about two hundred pounds of it in your valise and get your allowance of weight on the balance. This is economy and economy gathers a good deal of moss.

Convince a customer in talking of his business that it is a cold day whenever a better merchant than he is born.

Whenever you are selling goods to a woman, remark accidentally that it is a surprise to you how so young a person can show such business qualifications. It's the youth, not the b. q. that she thinks about.

Some traveling men stop at a two dollar a day hotel and charge it in their expense account at three and a half, but this isn't giving the "old man" a chance and we do not recommend it.—The Drummer.

THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON.

The City of Charleston was under siege 285 days, and for over 500 days under fire. When Gilmore got his "Swamp Angel" planted and sent word that he would open fire on the city the citizens of Charleston laughed over his message. His guns were five miles away, and the idea that he could do the city any harm was too absurb to entertain.

It is just midnight.

W-r-r-r ! S-s-s-s ! Scream—rush—bang !

Gilmore has sent his first shell into the city. It strikes a brick building opposite the Post-office and explodes with a crash which turns 5,000 people out of bed. Men who heard the horrible screaming of that great shell as it came over the waters of the bay will never forget the sound.

In five minutes a second one came, but this failed to explode and is now on exhibition at Maj. Willis' on the wharf. It just fits into and just fills a nail keg. By the time the third one arrived all Charleston was awake and full of alarm. That was the beginning of a siege which has no parallel in American warfare. Day after day—week after week—month after month, with only at intervals of a few hours at a time for the guns to cool or some new move to be made, the bombardment continued. Grant did care to injure Petersburg. Gilmore would have wiped Charleston off the face of the earth if he had been able.—M. Quad.

Among the instruments described during the recent meeting of the British Association was one—exhibited by Sir F. Brunwell—employed for ascertaining the velocity of trains and the efficiency of brakes. With this apparatus it was found that a train weighing one hundred and twenty-five tons ran five miles, five yards, after steam was shut off while traveling at a speed of forty-five miles an hour. The line was level and the day perfectly calm.

Brook trout take perfectly naturally to salt water. Some of the largest and finest trout ever shown in New York have been Long Island trout, the best of which run up from the ocean. Even in Connecticut those streams which empty into Long Island Sound furnish the largest trout that are caught in the States.

The most manifest sign of wisdom is continued cheerfulness.

Charity gives itself rich, but covetousness hoards itself poor

No. II.

MONDAY, APRIL 15th.—The day opened with a clear sky and warm weather. Spent most of the morning in getting our baggage on board the steamship, and collecting whatever we may need in the route from Chagres to Panama and getting them safely stowed away on board. As I stood upon the deck of the steamer, I could best witness the look of anxiety which was pictured on the faces of the many who thronged that landing place, when they bid their friends farewell, as they entered the ship, which was to bear them from their homes and all which they held dear in life. The ship got under way at 3 o'clock P. M., from pier No. 2 with about 320 steerage and 200 cabin passengers. Had a fair wind and strong. Ran down to Sandy Hook by 6 o'clock. Left our Pilot and lost sight of the land about 8 o'clock in the evening. The sea was very smooth through the night. Ran along with top and top gallant sails, jib, stay-sails, mainsails and fore-spencer set. Ran at the rate of 10 knots until daylight with the wind nearly north-west. Many feelings of sadness or regret does one experience as he first sets his foot upon the deck of a ship which is to convey him far from the country which gave him birth. As the lines of his native state recede from his view, and everything fades from his vision but the sky above, and the unfathomed and trackless ocean beneath him, his mind alternates between hope and fear, and the change from joy to sadness, from excitement to calmness is in quick succession. The smoothness of the ocean has produced little or no sickness as yet and the deck is lined with the xpecta nts of fortune by their visit to California.

TUESDAY, 16th.—This morning broke upon us bright and clear. The sea continues smooth. But few of the passengers are sick as yet. Took an observation at noon; found ourselves in latitude 37' 20 N., longitude 73' 40 West. Ran a course through the morning South 1-2 east. Distance ran after leaving Sandy Hook, 195 miles, time 19 hours, very pleasant, porpoises thick. There were a number shot from the hurricane deck.

7 O'CLOCK P. M.—Sea continues smooth. The noise and merriment of the crew (as is usual) upon a ship as she first enters upon her outward bound trip continues, and the steward can with difficulty satisfy their rich appetites.

WEDNESDAY, 17th.—The sun rose clear from the bosom of the ocean and it was a most splendid sight, especially to those who had never witnessed it before. Took an observation at 12 o'clock. Distance ran for the last 24 hours 210 miles, latitude 33' 50 north, longitude 73' 18 west. The wind is increasing. 7 o'clock, wind blows strong and the sea is making. Passengers are getting sick and retiring to their berths. 9 o'clock, wind increases and the ship rolls heavily. At least 100 passengers are sea sick. Often, on a passage on the ocean something occurs, although it may be a slight incident, which for the moment creates a smile from almost any one. There is a gentleman in the steerage who figures in the character of a little, thick, fussy Frenchman, and who is in his own estimation, a gentlemen of some consequence in the world. He occupies his berth in company with two other passengers. All the berths in the steerage are limited to three passengers and they are selected by drawing the numbers by the passengers. The drawing was had, and a large number were left without any berth on which to rest. As the ship rolled heavily at night and our hero feared that one of his companions might get the start of himself in the selection of the berth, he retired early in the evening and made his selection of the outside tier of the berth, which happened to be a lower one and not more than 6 inches from the deck. He turned in and had but just commenced a comfortable snooze when his nap was broken by a heavy guttural noise which proceeded from a very corpulent fellow occupying an upper berth a few feet above him, who was laboring under a severe attack of sea sickness. From the time of our departure from New York, the sea had been smooth until within a few hours, and the glorious appetites of the passengers had prepared the stomachs of all for a rolling movement. The passenger in the upper berth feeling that he must of necessity discharge a load which from the motion of the ship was growing too weighty and restless to bear, was compelled to rid himself of the trouble which was surrounding him. He (with a strong effort) showered from his bed a stream of liquid which imparted not the most pleasant odor to all, and not the least to our gentleman of the lower berth. As the shower of the ship's provisions, which had occupied a tenement in the stomach of the corpulent fellow, came down upon the deck within a few inches of our French hero, he ran out his head from his berth with the intention of rebuking his assailant for his assault, just in season to catch on the top of his head a second and most liberal discharge of the same commodity as the first. He pulled in his head all dripping with the spray, like a turtle under his shell, and let in upon the sick one in terms more forcible than elegant, while his hat had been left on the outside of the berth to secure the remainder of the contribution, which was generous and liberal in the extreme. It added not a little merriment to those of us who were not sick, especially to a son of the Green Isle, who furnished his full share of fun by his witty remarks upon the circumstance. Turned in about 10 o'clock upon a standee berth about midships, but could not sleep as the motion of the ship required all my time and strength to keep my resting place on its legs. J. G. PHELPS.

CELEBRATED

PLAINTAIN SALVE.

An invaluable Remedy for Cuts, Burns, Scalds, Sore Lips, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Salt Rheum, Boils, Corns, Fresh Cuts, Wounds, Inflammation of all kinds, etc., etc.

It is prompt in action, thus affording speedy relief and complete cure. For healing BRUISES, CUTS and WOUNDS, to which Farmers, Seamen, Mechanics and all kinds of operatives are constantly exposed, this preparation has no equal. No family should be without it.

A single trial will commend its worth to all.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1867, by MRS. WYATT, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of Massachusetts.

TESTIMONIALS.

This is to certify that the Plantain Salve, manufactured by Mrs. Wyatt, is a most excellent relief for Burns, Sores, Ulcers of various kinds, Sprains, Enlarged Joints, and Scrofula Swellings, etc.

P. M. CHASE, M. D.,
Danvers, Mass.

This certifies that I fully concur in the above testimony relating to Mrs. Wyatt's Plantain Salve, and consider it an excellent remedy.

Having used, and being acquainted with the composition of Mrs. Wyatt's Plantain Salve, I can recommend it with pleasure for diseases it is recommended for.

DR. E. GODDARD,
Charlestown, Mass.

This is to certify that I had a Bunion on my foot for five years, and it became a running sore. I used every kind of Salve that I could hear of and could not heal it. Last fall I commenced using Mrs. Wyatt's Plantain Salve, and it is now as well as it ever was. I thought it my duty to make it known to the public, so that others may use it.

S. YOUNG,
Salem, Mass.

MRS. WYATT:—I have sold quite a quantity of your Plantain Salve and have many customers who speak very highly of it. Please send me 1-4 gross.

Dramatic and Musical.

The long expected season of Italian Opera will begin this week,—to continue through this week and next—at the Boston Theatre. Adelina Patti, the great diva; Albani, whose success has been so marked; Scalchi, the distinguished contralto; Mlle. Paolina Rossini, pleasantly remembered here; Mme. Fursch-Madi, dramatic soprano, who is to make her first appearance here; Mierzwinski, the new Russian tenor, whose singing in "William Tell" has created such a furore; and others of Her Majesty's Opera Company are to present the different operas. Patti appears for the first time this evening in "Linda di Chamouni" and also on Saturday afternoon in "La Traviata." Thursday evening "William Tell" with the great Russian tenor, Friday evening "Il Trovatore" and Saturday evening "Faust" with Mme. Albani. The advance sale of seats has been very large and during the short stay of the company it is expected that the spacious Boston Theatre will be filled.

A season of genuine, pure and hearty fun may be expected to set in at the Globe Theatre this week. Mr. Charles Wyndham, the noted English actor, and known as one of the brightest of comedians, is to make his re-entrance on the Boston stage, supported by his own company, brought to America from the actor's London Theatre — the Criterion. "Fourteen days," the Byron comedy, will be the chief feature of the entertainment during the week, being preceded nightly by the comedietta "Ruth's Romance," in which Miss Rose Saker is to appear.

The sudden illness of Margaret Mather at the Park caused that theatre to be closed Saturday afternoon and evening. This was unfortunate for the management, as the house had been nearly all sold. She will not, it is thought, be able to appear this week, and J. M. Hill, her enterprising manager, has called from the West Benj. Maginley in the sensational drama, "A Square Man," and which will be presented during the week. Next week it is expected that Denman Thompson will appear as "Josh Whitcomb."

"Iolanthe" began its twelfth week at the Bijou Theatre Monday evening,—and nothing more is left to say of the matter.

The Boston Theatre Company, who have been on the New England Circuit for many weeks, will return to the home theatre Saturday evening, March 10. Manager Tompkins has selected "Ruy Blas" for Mr. Redmund (he has played the role abroad often, and made in it a hit at the Burnham Drake benefit at the Globe), Mrs. Thomas Barry and others, and "Slasher and Crasher" for Messrs. Maguinnis and Craven.

"The Professor," Janauschek in a choice repertory, Daly's Theatre company in "Our English Friend," John T. Raymond in his latest piece, "In Paradise," and the Union Square Company in "Les Rantzaus" and "A Parisian Romance" are among the season's attractions at the Park.

Palmer & Ulmer's "Danites and '49 company" gave two excellent performances at Mechanic Hall last Thursday afternoon and evening (February 22), and there were very good houses at both. The play was not overrunning with blood and thunder, and the acting was very good.

Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels carried the audience by storm on Friday evening with their wit and music. Much of the programme was entirely new, and it was all "taking."

Margaret Mather is booked for Salem under Moulton & Johnson; those who failed to see her in Boston will have an opportunity then, if she recovers from her illness. She will be greeted with the largest house of the season.

Messrs. Moulton & Johnson deserve to be generously supported in the course of "Harry W. French's Illustrated Lectures" that will be given in Mechanic Hall under their auspices, commencing on Thursday evening, March 1, with "The Land of the Midnight Sun." These lectures are nearly all descriptive of scenes in foreign lands and both in their descriptive and illustrative features are eminently worthy of patronage. Mr. French has spent many years in travel and study, and as an author and lecturer, has attained the highest rank. Each lecture will be illustrated by at least eighty dissolving views. Tickets are on sale at Ropes' drug store, and the low price at which they have been placed ought to insure a full house.

The Salem Schubert Club, numbering about 50 persons, accompanied by Mr. W. J. Winch, drove to the Danvers Lunatic Asylum on Friday evening, where they gave a fine concert in the presence of a large number of inmates. After the concert the club was entertained at supper by the staff of the asylum.

Rice's Opera Company will appear March 12th in "Iolanthe."

Messrs. Editors:—Will you allow the following a space in your paper, which seems to me to be a very important subject. I suppose there are very few of our citizens who are unacquainted with the fact that the Institute Libraries and the Sutton Reference Library exist in our midst, and who do not know that very interesting and instructive free Lectures are given at the Institute Hall during the winter months. I know that there are many of our citizens who fully appreciate the value of the opportunities that are thus offered to us, and of these a large number undoubtedly avail themselves of them, while many such either cannot, or do not make any attempt to enjoy the pleasure and profit that they might gain by doing so. There must also be very many among the inhabitants of our Town, who have never realized what the "Peabody Institute" is, and what valuable contents can be found and used there. Now the question arises how can those inhabitants who have never made use of the Institute, but who are capable of doing so, be induced to do so? You know that it has been said that one of the Yankee ways of answering a question is to ask another one, so I am going to try to answer the foregoing question by simply asking another which seems to suggest one of the best, if not the best, remedies. Will not all citizens of this town, who know, by experience, the advantages that the Institute offers, use their influence, as far as possible, to induce others to make use of the Institute who have never done so before? The arguments to be used will be somewhat suggested by the individual's occupation and taste, modified by the good judgment of his adviser. F. H. A.

A series of meetings under the auspices of the State Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association of Mass. will be held in the South Cong. Church, beginning Friday evening March 2nd, at 7 1-2 o'clock. These meetings will be conducted by Mr. S. M. Sayford, secretary of the State Com. They will be evangelistic but not denominational. The cooperation of all Christians is invited. Seats free to all.

Post 89 of Beverly, 90 of Danvers, and 34 of Salem, and the Department Commander Geo. S. Evans and suite of Cambridge, have been invited to attend the camp-fire of Union Post 50 G. A. R., to be held at their hall next Wednesday evening.

We received the following note this morning presumably for publication. What it means we don't know, but it looks as if the corruption was not all on one side, when they talk of sending a last year's campaign bill to the governor to pay.

Peabody, Feb. 27, 1883.

Mr. Editor; I do not want Mr. Brophy to get any gravel until we know who his land joiners are, as he owes $1.65 for the last campaign to a victualer's saloon and if he don't pay it I will send the bill to the State House as he has not as good friends now in the State House as he had years ago. Martin lost his best friend at the State House, John A. Taylor.

Mr. John A. Taylor.

Tickets to the fifth anniversary of the re-institution of Holten Lodge, I. O. O. F., are going rapidly. If any of the brothers have not yet secured them they should do so at once. Tickets at Geo. F. Sanger's coal office.

Mr. George F. Watkins advertises pure milk, in another column, Mr. Watkins obtains his milk of the best dairies in the vicinity, and succeeds Mr. Trask, whose route he purchased. Give him a call from your house.

Two Moods.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMSON.

All dark and gloomy was the day,
And tireless fell the pitiless rain,
Down o'er the fields and forests gray,
And sobbed against my window-pane.

My heart in keeping with the day,
Kept sobbing with the sobbing rain,
Nor friendly smiles could e'er allay
The burden of its weight of pain.

For oh, at morning time I'd heard,
What wandering gossips love to tell;
Some slanderer's cruel, piercing word.
And down my cheeks the teardrops fell.

And still wept on my anguished heart,
When bitter tears their fountain sealed;
For oh, the wound made by the dart
Still bleeding fresh, would not be healed.

'Twas then I said, oh weary life!
And art thou ever worth the giving?
With all the turmoil, pain and strife,
Oh, art thou ever worth the living?

But lo, the morning broke again,
And all the world was one glad song;
The sun had chased away the rain,
And joyous was earth's living throng.

And faithful sleep had brought to me
Her ever promised soothing balm,
As night had made the shadows flee,
So Peace had brought her holy calm.

And then I said, oh, joyous life!
And thou art ever worth the living;
Worth all the turmoil, pain and strife,
For rest, sweet Peace, to me is given.

And when came forth another day,
And still the sun in splendor reigned,
No gloomy clouds obscured my way,
My heart had even tenor gained.

'Twas then I said—each different mood
Of day before and yesterday;
The one all ill, the one all good,
Holding apart its sovereign sway,
With power that nothing could control,
Had equal right within my soul.

And as I wisely pondered each,
My soul with better feelings fraught,
Divined the lesson they did teach,
And said with ever questioning thought,

How shall I know my neighbors' heart?
And why they smile when I am sad,
Or why with them I have no part
When they are sad and I am glad.

'Tis well to weep when others weep,
To joy when all their world is fair;
That we each others hearts may keep,
While good and ill alike we share.

That so we live a heaven below,
Till in our "Father's House above,"
All gloom is changed to radiant glow,
Supported by Immortal Love.

The Ninety and Nine.

There are ninety and nine that live and die,
In want, and hunger, and cold,
That one may revel in luxury.
And be lapped in its silken fold;
The ninety and nine in their hovels bare,
The one in a palace with riches rare.

They toil in the fields, the ninety and nine
For the fruits of our mother earth,
They dig and delve in the dusky mine,
And bring its treasures forth.
And the wealth released by their sturdy blows
To the hands of the one forever flows.

From the sweat of their brows the desert blooms,
And the forest before them falls,
Their labor has builded humble homes
And cities with lofty halls.
And the one owns city, homes and lands,
And the ninety and nine have empty hands.

—Justice.

The Blue and Gray.

I had two brothers once,
Warm hearted, bold and gay;
They left my side—one wore the blue,
The other wore the gray.

One rode with Stonewall and his men,
And joined his fate to Lee;
The other followed Sherman's march
Triumphant to the sea.

Both fought for what they deemed the right,
And died with sword in hand.
One sleeps amid Virginia's hills,
And one in Georgia's sand.

The same sun shines upon their graves,
My love for them must stay;
And so upon my bosom lies,
The knot of blue and gray.

Selected Story.

A Terrible Ghost Story.

BY AN OLD FARMER.

I am an old farmer, living in the oldest house in Oldtown.

The only thing new upon the place is my well.

We have an ancient well, but no one ever tastes the water there, though it is as cold and clear as crystal.

I suppose the place is worth a great deal.

It was valued at twenty thousand dollars when I bought it years ago.

The house is a handsome mansion—the sort of a place a gentleman retiring from business usually buys to end his days in, and city people come to see it and the grounds, and seem to be delighted.

Now, when I tell you that I came into Oldtown with exactly six hundred dollars in my pocket, and that I had no idea what I should do when that was spent, you will feel surprised that, six months after, I owned this place.

But I'll tell you all about it.

It was what folks call a haunted place, and for ten years it had stood vacant.

People tried to live there, but were always frightened away.

If it had been only the house, that could have been torn down; but nobody could even farm the land.

Twelve years before this, the proprietor had been a jealous old gentleman, who had a young wife, whom he would never permit out of his sight if he could avoid it.

However, she was as sly as he was watchful, and she managed to flirt sufficiently to make herself talked about.

Being very pretty, two silly young fellows fell in love with her, and one used to follow her about, making eyes and sighing dreadfully, like a lover in a play.

The post-mistress said he wrote to her—and I suppose he did.

And at last news spread through the place that she had run away with him.

He was gone, and she was gone; and the old man came one morning to Lawyer Tantivy, and sold his property at a great loss, to a man who had wanted it for years—a rich man, who liked to have it said that he owned the finest place in Oldtown.

It was plain that the poor old gentleman did not care what became of himself: and when he had got the money he wandered away, and was never seen again.

The new proprietor moved up to the great house in state; but at dawn the whole family—servants and all—returned to their old quarters.

What they had seen, or what they had not seen, it was hard to tell, but they were all nearly frightened to death.

The doctor was sent for for the ladies, and they spoke of the most awful apparitions.

After this, the head of the family and three constables, from the little market town, spent a day and a night there.

They held their tongues; but those who saw them next knew that they had been well frightened and the man put the place into the market at once.

Lawyer Tantivy privately told people that only a coward would have been frightened by rats in an old wall, and he sold the property to a city man.

Much the same thing happened, but the house was not sold again.

The city man went elsewhere, and tried in vain to get rid of his bargain.

It was let for the summer once, but the people did not stay a week.

After a while, nobody would farm the ground.

Some said they saw a woman with her throat cut; some that they saw a man with a wound in his breast; some both.

Voices were heard; hands were felt; and there, when I came to the place, the old house stood, with moths and spiders for its only tenants.

I went up and looked at it, and then I talked to Jane.

She had not a bit of superstition in her, and she agreed to what I proposed.

I went to old Tantivy, and offered him a hundred a year for a five years' lease of the place, the five hundred to be paid in one sum.

"After that," said I, "I'll give you two thousand for the property. Wife and I are not afraid of ghosts."

The old lawyer shook his head.

"You say you've met with losses," said he, "and have just six hundred dollars left? Keep it. You couldn't live in that house one week. I've tried it. I'd make a bargain with a rich man, but I'm not rascal enough to take a poor man's all."

"I risk it," said I. "I do it freely, but the papers must be made out fair and square—two thousand after my five years' lease."

And so I had my way.

Jane and I went up to the house next day.

It was a wonderful, grand, dirty old place.

We set to work to clean it—to drive out the insects and the rats; and we got some fresh straw to sleep on, for the beds were all mouldering away.

That night at nine we lay down, with a lamp burning, and went to sleep like two tops; and I think it must have been twelve o'clock, or nigh to it when Jane shook me violently.

I started up, and holding each other's hands, we both saw what had frightened her.

A man stood near the bed, a young man, with fair hair curling about his temples; his breast was bare, and we saw a great bleeding wound there.

I had my pistol under my pillow, and I drew it out and looked at him.

"Away you go, or I fire," I said; I'm not a fool to be tricked in this way."

Instead of obeying, he slowly moved towards the bed.

Jane shrieked, and drew the counterpane over her head.

I covered him with my pistol.

"One step more, and I fire," I said.

He took the step.

I fired.

A shriek of laughter followed, and there was no one there.

I arose and searched the place.

Every window was barred, every door locked.

I unlocked one of the doors, and entered the adjoining room.

A great bed, with tester and canopy, stood there, and upon this lay the figure of a woman, all in white, covered with blood.

I rushed towards it, lamp in hand.

Again those hollow shrieks of laughter, and nothing but the stained and yellow ticking of an old feather bed lay under the canopy.

"Luke! Luke!" screamed my wife, who had followed me, clinging to my arm. "It is all true. Let us leave the place."

"Jane," said I, "it seems to be true that this place is haunted, but we have risked our all on it. The things we have seen have not hurt us, and I propose to drive them away. I'll take you to the village, if you like, and leave you there to live, but here I stay till I beat these ghosts."

"Not alone," said Jane; and she did not leave me.

If you believe me, day and night for three weeks we were haunted as people never were before—faces, voices, hands—in the house or in the field; and worse than all, we grew ill.

I sent for the doctor, who wouldn't come, and we went to him.

"You are poisoned," he said. What have you eaten, or what have you been drinking?"

We thought it over, and I told him that we knew of nothing harmful, and that we cooked and prepared all our own food.

"I never knew any one to pass a day at that confounded house you live in without being affected in this way," said he; "even those who did not eat there. Constable Collins says he touched nothing but cold water, and he came to me nearly dying."

"It's the well, then," said I. "I'll beg water from my neighbors until I've cleaned it out."

And that day I began.

We got better slowly, and I tried to hire two farm laborers to help me with my well.

I was almost tired of living as I did and feeling like a maniac; and one day I went to the well, and sat there, wondering whether it might not be best to give up and go somewhere as a farm laborer, when I felt what seemed to be an icy hand on my head, and looking up saw my two ghosts, side by side.

They were horrible enough, I can tell you, and they looked at me and pointed into the well; and then I heard two voices crying:

"Get us out! Get us out! Get us out and bury us! The water is cold, and our wounds are deep. Get us out."

And then the truth came to me, goodness knows how.

I was just able to crawl over to my neighbor's house, and I said to him:

"Mr. Jarvis, will you send one of your men to the authorities and have the police sent up to my place? There's something in my well that ought not to be there."

Well, they came, and I was right.

They took out of that well two bodies, rolled up in sheet lead.

By bits of jewelry, and things of that sort, they found out that they were the bodies of the young wife of the old proprietor and the young man who used to run after her.

The old man had killed them both, but he must have had help to bury them in their leaden coffins.

And now people began to remember how two plumbers, who had a good deal of this sheet lead in their shop, grew suddenly well off, and went from the place about the time the old man sold the estate, and they believed that he had paid them for helping him to dispose of the bodies.

They were buried in the graveyard, and Jane and I never saw the ghosts again.

The farm land and summer visitors brought me the price I had agreed upon for the place, and I've been a prosperous man ever since.

The Benefits of Mosquitoes.

[From the New York Observer.]

As they are not lively at this season of the year, I hope to be heard more patiently in their behalf than if I were writing in summer.

Everything has its uses. We may not, often we do not, know what good comes of it, but in the great economies of the universe there is something useful in the being, living and doing of everything that hath breath. It is very little that we know of anything, and it is much to know how little we do know. There was a time when the streets of the city were infested with worms dangling from the trees, and sparrows were imported to destroy them. Many now think the remedy worse than the plague. Sparrows are a greater annoyance to some people than worms or mosquitoes. But neither of these plagues is an unmixed evil. Something may be said in favor of both, and quite as much of one as the other.

The philosopher and the Christian have remedies for the great trials of life. Calamities, fearful to think of, they meet with calmness, finding their relief in the principles they have taught or learned, but the little ills of life, petty annoyances, too small in their esteem to be reasoned about or prayed over, fret and worry them just as they trouble other people who make no claim to high attainments in grace or wisdom. The gossip of society especially in the country, where everybody knows everybody, sometimes mars the comfort of sensitive people, who are easily hurt, and excessively annoyed by what is said of them. Talking about people is the great business of life with many who think themselves amiable and sociable. But it is not the good, so much as the evil in others, that human nature takes most delight in speaking of. To be annoyed with the gossip that comes to the ear of a good man or woman is very foolish. It is wisdom to be amused by it, and if there be any occasion for the talk, as there is apt to be fire where there is smoke, the silly gossip may be converted into a "means of grace." The talk was less than a mosquito bite, and proved to be profitable.

Preachers are sensitive as other men to criticism, and sometimes show their annoyance, when unconscious of exposing their weakness. In every congregation there are several mosquitoes: people who display their superior wisdom and virtue by pointing out the defects of the preaching. Sometimes they stick their sharp points into the minister himself, and tell him plainly how he could do better, especially in hitting the man who sits near the pulpit and needs to be preached to more plainly. Such criticism is always impertinent and annoying. But if there is no reason in it, it leads the preacher to be more careful rightly to devide the word, so that each may have his portion. While also it is a trial that worketh patience, and patience is so rare a virtue it is very cheaply purchased by the bites of a few mosquitoes.

The lessons I learned in that school (the pastoral) are working out their peaceable fruits in a life of patience and long-suffering in another service—the press. Ye yourselves are witnesses of the meekness and good-nature with which I take the attacks of the mosquito tribe, which is now as large, vigorous, and venomous as when, a frugal swain, I kept my flocks among the Highlands of the Hudson. Why, there is one newspaper that lives and moves to buzz, and bite at mine. I never try to kill the mosquito. He keeps at it, carping, criticising, trying to sting. It does me good, teaching me the unloveliness and sinfulness of fault-finding and back-biting. It also helps me to see the folly and meanness of meddling with other people's business, and the beauty and duty of minding one's own. It was an apostle who said, "Study to be quiet," and who ever saw a quiet mosquito?

The secrecy with which the mosquito makes his attack, the darkness under which his approach is hid, suggests the person who seeks to pierce and pain you with anonymous letters. These are more numerous since the invention of postal-cards. It is very easy to inflict a wound in the dark, and there is not a baser coward in the world than one who writes a letter to give pain and conceals his name. The mosquito who infests your pillow and draws blood from you in your sleep, is braver and better than the petty thief who withholds his name when he makes his stab. Still, the little rascal has his uses, and I feel the benefit of his bite while unable to put him to death.

But there is no station or calling, no sex or condition, which a mosquito may not annoy. Its insignificance is often its protection. As little sins escape our notice, and work our injury by their number and frequency, so the annoyances that come from others, are often very small, yet considerable and fatal to our peace when their name gets to be legion. For it must needs be that offences come. We must go out of the world, if we would escape them. They are from within and from without; physical, moral, spiritual, fanciful. We are very imperfect, too sensitive, too selfish, impatient of contradiction, conceited and confident, wilful and stubborn. If the least thing interferes with our ease and enjoyment, if the weather, the fire, the dinner or the supper is not just as we would have it, the world is all wrong. We have been bitten by a mosquito, and are bleeding to death! Such sensitiveness is great weakness, and there is no religion in it. Better take things as they come, make the best of the worst, and out of the eater get some meat, and out of the bitter all the sweet you can.

I admire the serene philosophy of a distinguished American citizen. He was one day sorely berated by his spouse, who did not know that a neighbor was in the house and heard her giving her husband a piece of her mind. When the two friends were alone, the neighbor said:

"Do you stand that kind of talk?"

"Oh, la, yes," he replied, "it amuses her, and don't hurt me."

And there is a higher view to be taken of this matter. "This is not our continuing city," as every inhabitant would be glad to believe if he lived where mosquitoes most do congregate. The little troubles that chafe the spirit, annoyances too small to be mentioned, yet irritating the surface of the body and the soul, are good to remind us that the world is full of evil, and perfect peace is not to be ours in this vale of tears. It does us good to be stung into consciousness of this fact, if we will not learn it otherwise. We must not have things so very comfortable, convenient and satisfying as to wish them to be ours always. For there is a higher and better life beyond, whither our trials ought to be pushing and driving us, if we will not be led by the goodness that crowns our days with mercies ineffable. We have no praise or penances, or mortifications of the flesh for the sake of the soul. That is not Christ's spirit or command. Use the world without abusing it. Do not wear tight shoes to keep your feet from going astray. Be shod with the preparation of the gospel and walk in the ways of light and peace. Cast all your cares on Him who was wounded for us, and by whose stripes we are healed. So will the wounds of friends be found faithful and good, and even the bites and stings and arrows and spears of the wicked will stir us up to fight the good fight, and to possess our souls in patience. Let these trifles remind us of the buffetings that he endured who bore our sins: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again: was made perfect through suffering, and won and wore a crown of thorns. IRENÆUS.

The latest parlor game at Laramie, W. T., is thus described: The girls sit in a row, with a vacant chair in front of each. The young men are stationed in another room, and are brought in one by one. When he comes in the youth chooses his chair, and the young lady behind him binds his eyes with a handkerchief. Then the black cook comes in kisses him and disappears. The young man is released, feeling much refreshed and elated, and promptly retires to the other end of the room. His feelings when the next young man comes in and is treated to this novel entertainment, can be imagined, but they are mitigated by the pleasure of seeing the other fellows undergoing the experience.

TO PUBLISHERS AND EDITORS.—Many Newspapers and Magazines have been established in the United States and Canada within the last two years, the names of which do not appear in any Newspaper Directory or Catalogue. The publishers and editors of such are invited to send copies and a full description of their respective publications to the Editor of Hubbard's Newspaper and Bank Directory of the World, New Haven, Ct., U.S.A., that they may be properly catalogued and described in the forthcoming edition of that work for 1883. Editors who kindly give this notice an insertion in their columns will confer a favor upon the Press of America.

Truly wonders will never cease, thought we, as we were shown the workings of instantaneous Photography as done by Mr. A. B. Cross at his studio, No. 256 1-2 Essex street. By this method accurate pictures of infants can be obtained, and pet animals that cannot be kept still, are more truthfully portrayed than can be done by the best artist painter in the world. Mr. Cross' studio is filled with choice pictures, finished so finely that they are worth visiting and examining as works of art. If any of our readers want pictures, true to life, we can suggest no place where they will be better suited, or get more for their money.—Favorite.

CULTIVATION OF ONIONS.—Last spring the following item went the rounds of the papers: 'Joseph Harris, who is an old Onion grower, says the price of onions has been so high for the past three years, that every body is going to sow onions the coming spring. His advice is, "don't."

Coming from a man who had onion seed for sale, the advice was certainly disinterested. And the result showed its correctness. Onions have been very cheap. Now, Mr. Harris advises those who have had no experience in the cultivation of onions, to sow a small patch this spring. In onion growing a little experience is worth a whole cart-load of agricultural books. Onion seed is cheap, and it is a good time to learn the business. In a year or two onions and onion seed will be as high as ever, and those who understand their cultivation will realize handsome profits. In his Catalogue for 1883, Mr. Harris gives some good directions for the cultivation of onions. It is sent free. Address, Joseph Harris, Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y.

e March number of Frank Leslie's lar Monthly is one of the most in- ting that has yet appeared of this at- ive Magazine. The opening article Noel Ruthven, "From Balmoral to rne," is admirable; and the following well repay the reader; "Cyclones and adoes," by F. Grundy; "Fires in tres and their prevention," by Hor- Townsend. They are elaborately il- ated. In the department of fiction contributions by W. O. Stoddard, Russell, W. Edgar McCann, etc., etc. e are interesting sketches and adven- s, poems of great merit, and a new l of great interest is commenced, en- d, "The Beautiful Countess of Clair- ." IMPORTANT TOTHE SICK.—To those have used Swedish Remedies, they w full well the value of them. To e who from prejudice have not used n, we can say that they are the very Medicines for the diseases for ch they are recommended. Swed- Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds all diseases of the Lungs. When n together with Swedish Botanic pound (the great blood purifier), it cure Consumption in the first and nd stages.

The frontispiece portrait of Gambetta in the March Century, and the accompanying article by a writer who was intimately acquainted with Gambetta, appear now with a timeliness, which a foot-note explains, is not to be credited to editorial haste or energy, since they were both in preparation for the March Century before Gambetta's illness. A short biographical sketch of the late Dr. Leonard Bacon, with portrait, is contributed by his son, Leonard Woolsey Bacon, under the appropriate title, "A Good Fight Finished." John Burroughs, in "Signs and Seasons," chats charmingly and instructively of country life and Nature; and Elbridge Kingsley has illustrated the paper with several striking engravings. Mr. Howells, in his second part of "A Woman's Reason," which has already made a strong impression, introduces a catastrophe that changes the whole tenor of the heroine's life; there is also a detailed description of a Boston auction. Mrs. Burnett's "Through One Administration" is nearly finished, and Mrs. Mary Hallock Foote's striking story, "The Led-Horse Claim," is brought to an effective conclusion. The poems of the number are by Andrew Lang, Mrs. Julia C. R. Dorr and others. Worthy of special mention is an unfinished poem by William Cullen Bryant. In "Bric-a-Brac," besides light and amusing verses, may be found an extract from Swedenborg's "Treatise on Hell," which applies with singular aptness to the political "boss" of to-day.

In Ballou's Magazine for March, the hero in "The Belle of Australia," Mr. Thomes's great story, appears to be in a peculiar position. He is in the presence of his prospective father-in-law; and, as the young man does not wish to marry, there is a stormy scene and a laughable one at the same time. The Chief of the Melbourne police seems to be taking a hand in the matter, and is using a little coercion to bring matters to a crisis. Besides "The Belle," there are many nice stories and poems, and some fine illustrations. Ballou's is published at 23 Hawley Street, Boston, at only $1.50 per year, or 15 cents a single copy. If your nearest newsdealer does not keep it, ask him to order it, and he will do so, or send 10 cents for the latest number, and see what a nice family magazine it is. It is handsomely illustrated. Address Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley street, Boston, Mass.

A rheumatic old man named Meeker,
Was sick a whole year in Topeeker,
He there would have died,
But St. Jacobs Oil tried,
It sent him back cured to Osweeger.

St. Nicholas for March has a notable list of contributors. Archibald Forbes furnishes a vividly interesting story of the Turco-Russian war, entitled "Where was Villiers?" In the "Letter-box" is a pen and ink sketch of Mr. Forbes by Hubert Herkomer, from the portrait of him by that artist. Rose Terry Cooke contributes a capital story of the Michigan fires of 1881, called "The Wrong Coat." There is a charming poem, "Ben Bruin," by Lucy Larcom, and one by Celia Thaxter. "That Sly Old Woodchuck" is a characteristic American boy story by W. O. Stoddard; and Miss Anna Eichberg, author of "The First Violin," has a delightful tale from the German of Leander. E. S. Brooks finishes his four part story of "The Field of the Cloth of Gold." The Frontispiece is an engraving of Greuze's celebrated painting of "The Broken Pitcher." Besides the foregoing, there are stories, sketches, poems and pictures by Charles Barnard, Sarah Winter Kellogg, W. L. Sheppard, De Cost Smith, and many others.

ELY'S CREAM BALM has completely cured me of Catarrh, of which I have been afflicted over ten years, after trying almost every remedy recommended, none having proved so effective and thorough. S. J. Aiken, Wholesale dealer in Boots and Shoes, 143 Federal St., Boston, Mass.

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

WHEN THE PRESS, some months since, spoke very confidently of the proposed attempt to extend the rails of the Lynn & Boston R. R. to this town, we felt sure that the enterprise and perseverance of the President of the road, reinforced by the will of the directors, and approval of our citizens, would bring about the desired result. The hearing last Wednesday has taken the project out of the possibilities—and its speedy completion is now an assured fact.

It had been whispered around that there was to be opposition, from the abuttors, to the laying of the rails on Washington street. It was found that there was no opposition to the extension of the road, but that while the preferences of some of our residents would have been in favor of Foster street, nearly all were willing to acquiesce in a result which would be of benefit to the entire town. The history of the extension of the railroad through populated thoroughfares in Lynn has been that the residents on those avenues who were at first opposed to it are now the patrons of the road, and its warmest adherents. We think our Washington street friends will prove but another illustration of this fact. There will be many times when the road will be a convenience to them; convenience will lead to necessity; till they will wonder how they were ever able to do without the horse cars which go by their very doors.

Naturally the people of South Peabody are the most jubilant over the result. The track has been located by our Selectmen, very nearly as was desired by the road, and of which plans were shown at the hearing; the rails have been ordered, and two new and beautiful cars, being made for the company, will be lettered for the Peabody portion of the line. Work will be commenced at once, and it is understood that the extension is to be ready for the summer travel. The road through South Peabody in the summer time is one of the most delightful drives in this portion of the country, and we shall expect our citizens, socially as well as in their business relations, to be more intimately acquainted with their neighbors in South Peabody, Wyoma, and Lynn proper. That it will enhance the value of the property along the line of the road, especially in South Peabody, is certain; that it will offer advantages to mechanics and those of our citizens in moderate circumstances to build for themselves houses where land is comparatively cheaper than near the square, and whither transportation is easy, is equally sure, and with good schools, a new church, and other advantages, we believe the future growth of the town is to be in a great measure in this direction.

THE TOWN WARRANT has been is sued by our Selectmen, and the annual meeting will be held next Monday. It contains forty-one articles; many of them being of the usual tenor and calling for the ordinary appropriations and elections by the town. Article 29 refers to a fire alarm; and we trust some action favorable to the same may be taken by our citizens. There are two articles calling for horse hose carriages, one at the house of Hose 3, and at the house of Hose 4. An appropriation of $3000 is asked for to extend the water-pipe from its present terminus in County street, through Lynn street as far as the estate of Samuel K. Newhall; also as far as the estate of the late Henry Newhall. The town is also asked to extend the water pipes from Tremont through Holly street, and from Lynn street through Brown and Maple streets in South Peabody. These requests for the extension of water privileges ought to be favorably considered. As the advantages of our high service water system begins to be appreciated, more calls will be made for the extension of the pipes, and with the showing which the water department makes, it would seem to be economy on the part of the town to grant the privileges of the high service to all who may desire to avail themselves of them. A compensation is desired by Article 33d for services rendered last season in putting out the fires in the woods in So. Peabody near the Alms House; a common sewer is wanted through Spring street to Goldthwaite's brook; an improved drainage is wanted through Sylvan street in the vicinity of Pike & Whipple's factory; and article 40 asks for the removal of the old Lexington Monument. This proposition will doubtless provoke considerable discussion; and the fixing of a location for its future preservation will very likely cause as much discussion as its removal. The monument was erected in 1837, taking the place of the old eagle post.

Besides the town business, the usual town officers are to be elected, including a board of health, three members of the school committee and three trustees of the Peabody Institute. A citizens' caucus has been called for to-morrow evening. We hope moderation and wisdom will guide their counsels and a list of officers be presented to our people which will be worthy of their support. The PRESS is not in favor of party nominations for these offices. Members of all parties are our fellow citizens; alike interested in the weal and woe of our town. We want the men who will devote themselves fearlessly and faithfully to its best interest, whether members of our own party or not of it. Such are the men we hope to see nominated to-morrow night. If so, they will receive and deserve the support of our voters.

THE UNITED States Government has been very unfortunate of late years in its coinage, in its denominations and their relative proportion as well as in design, execution and convenience. "The dollar of the fathers," though but little circulated, was a good standard, and its fractions, halves, quarters, dimes and half dimes, as well as the gold eagles and halves, were handsomely designed, well executed and very convenient for handling and the making of any amount of change. But a generation ago a new departure was taken and a systematic course of tinkering was inaugurated. First, we believe, came the white nickeledized cent, which though more handy in point of size, than the old copper, was barbarous in all the details of its execution, the flying wild goose, which was by courtesy supposed to be an eagle, being the laughing stock of the country. Then came the three cent fish scales, an infinitesimal nuisance, that nobody could pick up from a counter, and which once dropped in the pocket was safely invested, as it could never be found again. The gold dollar was another failure, principally, because in the night it was not readily distinguishable from a half dime. The silver three cent piece is constantly being mistaken for a dime, and the twenty cent piece for a quarter, while the thumb nails of traders get worn to the quick in testing the edges for milling. The standard dollar, which was announced with such a flourish of trumpets, is too heavy and bungling for free circulation, and millions on millions of them are overflowing the Treasury vaults, which will have to be enlarged if the coinage continues. The trade dollar was worse still, for though containing more silver than the standard it is not legal tender and can only be passed at a varying and uncertain discount. Then there was the fractional paper, of all denominations, from half a dollar down to three cents, which after a little wear became a mass of filthy rags, which no sensitive person would touch without a pair of tongs. Now we have the new five cent nickel, which, while in design and execution a great improvement on its predecessors, violates the law of Congress in not having its value expressed, and it is said will have to be called in, because it can be plated and passed for a half eagle, which one side resembles, the V meaning five dollars as well as five cents. If all concerned, from the head of the bureau to the boy who sweeps the mint, had combined to make our coinage ridiculous, they could not have done better, or worse, and now that the objectionable pieces are going out of circulation, is there not talent, sense and financial experience and ability enough in the country to get up a set of neat and convenient coins, such as was used in the "good old times." We can, at least, imitate them.

OUR NEIGHBOR of the Lynn Union brings forward an argument in favor of the rights of women which is certainly novel. It is well known that the larger proportion of communicants in our churches is of the female sex, and the reason for this disparity is claimed by the Union to be because the functions of the ministerial office are performed by men. Let women be allowed the privilege—let them be given the opportunity to present the claims of the gospel in the pulpit and the opposite result will follow—and the difference of the sexes will be equalized. This is certainly an argument in which the churches will be interested. But we had always supposed that the claims of the gospel rested upon a different foundation—that the work of the Holy Spirit was not dependent upon the influence which opposite sexes could bring to bear upon each other. We can easily imagine how impressional natures can be urged and entreated—even persuaded to join the ranks of some church by this influence. But we don't believe much in such a kind of conversion. If a man or woman is seriously convicted of sin, and desires to enter upon a different life, and seek the assistance which the Church can give, it does not matter much to them whether the light is given through the ministration of one of their own, or the opposite sex. And if we are not very much in error, women exercise now a powerful influence in the meetings of the church. It is true they do not preach the gospel—with a few exceptions. Where they do, we do not recall that the conversions are largely of the opposite sex. The inequality of the sexes in our churches, must, we think, be explained upon other and different grounds, although at the same time, the views of the Union are worthy of consideration.

THE DEATH of Paul A. Chadbourne removes a man prominent in educational circles—a man of rare endowments and especially fitted for the positions which he had been called to fill. He was a Maine boy, having been born in Berwick, Oct. 21, 1823. Early life on a farm was a school for him in that knowledge which had been put to a practical use in the later years of his life. He graduated from Williams College as valedictorian in the class of 1848; he studied theology and taught school in Conn. and New Hampshire until 1853, when he was called to a professorship in his Alma Mater, and during the rest of his life he was connected with collegiate institutions. He visited Europe in 1859, was lecturer in Mount Holyoke Seminary, and before the Lowell Institute, until he was offered the Presidency of the Amherst Agricultural College. An attack of bleeding at the lungs prevented him from accepting and he went to Wisconsin State University as its president. The labor here was very great and in 1872 he succeeded the venerable Mark Hopkins as president of Williams College, and infused new life into the institution. Private and personal reasons caused his retirement therefrom, and he was again offered the presidency of Amherst Agricultural College, which he this time accepted and remained in the office until his death, his annual report before the legislature having been presented while he lay dead in New York.

THE RAYMOND CALIFORNIA TRIPS.—Messrs. Raymond and Whitcomb, the well known excursion managers, have planned a magnificent series of California tours for the coming spring. There are three dates of departure, April 5th, 12th and 26th, and the route to be traversed extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada nearly to the Mexican border, embracing nearly 10,000 miles of pleasure travel. Ample time is afforded for seeing every place, and for side-trips to interesting points. The outward journey is over the Southern route with a wide detour, amid the scenic wonders of Colorado, and frequent stops by the way, and the homeward one over the Central and Union Pacific lines with a visit to Salt Lake City. Six days in Los Angelos, five days at the Hotel del Monte, Monterey, and sixteen days at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, are among the provisions made by the program. An 80-page circular will be sent to any address by W. Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston.

A new order from the adjutant general's office directs that hereafter in the formation of regimental line the position of the companies shall be according to the seniority of captains, regardless of the battalions to which they belong. The custom of late has been to form by battallions in accordance with the seniority of the commissions of the majors attached to them.

There have been several narrow escapes from falling under the cars since there has been so much ice. People cannot be too careful about getting on and off the trains at any time, but they should be particularly prudent when everything is covered with ice and snow so that it is almost impossible to secure a good foothold.

The Aim of Culture.

The aim and scope of culture are generally misunderstood. Matthew Arnold says, that, "from the faults and weaknesses of bookmen, a notion of something bookish, pedantic and futile has got itself more or less connected with the word." The popular conception of what is implied by this term shows how ignorant are the mass of people as to its true nature. Partial attainments in the wide world of knowledge do not give as a result true culture. The ability to fairly criticise a picture or a piece of chiseled marble, to interpret and render the masterpieces of music, to point out the subtle beauties of a poem; in short, knowledge of art in any of its departments, though refining in its influences, does not of itself constitute the possessor of such knowledge a cultured person. The æsthete, although he loves harmonies in outlines, colors, and sounds, has not necessarily a cultured soul. If the dodular idea is at fault here, so too is the idea of the select few who imagine themselves to be cultured because of the position which wealth gives, and the accessories it brings in its train. If anyone has no better certificate to prove that he is cultured than his passport into fashionable society, his fine clothes, his elegant phrases, his "stained glass attitudes," his money, or the intoxicating aroma that a proud old family name breathes forth, he has so far no higher claim to culture than the country rustic who gazes with gaping wonder upon his dazzling brilliancy. Blue blood is not an essential characteristic of culture, though it is apt to vaunt itself as such.

The beneficent aim and scope of true culture are often lost to view because of these mistaken conceptions which degrade the pure noble thing itself. They are to genuine culture what shoddy is to an honest fabric, or what plated brass is to pure gold. If we will but look at some of these misconceptions a little more in detail, we shall be helped to a clearer view of the whole subject, and a juster appreciation of its nature and worth.

A common error is that which seems to regard culture as aimed almost exclusively at the refinement of certain faculties. The intellect is disciplined and trained for the sake of logical acumen; not so much for the purpose of using the power so acquired for the benefit of others, perhaps, as for the influence and position which it gives. This selfish desire united with intellectual ability,—resolves one into a mere mental-gymnast, one of the most disagreeable of mortals. Shut up within himself in the indulgence of his own intellectual fancies you will find him either reclusive and distant, with a fever-and-ague chill about him, or a walking logical machine, grinding out his syllogistic hobbies to the infinite discomfort of all unfortunate enough to fall in his power.

Another, perhaps, cultivates assiduously his æsthetic tastes. In his estimation the fine arts are the highest objects of thought and study. He may even pitch his classic feelings to such a sensitive key as to be in full sympathy with Ruskin who is said to have declared that "he could not endure to live in America where there are no castles." This undue love for what is classic and quaint was fittingly rebuked by the witty reply of a Washington lady—the wife of a cabinet officer—to the remark of Oscar Wilde, that what he missed in this country was ruins and curiosities. Said the lady, "The ruins come soon enough; as for the curiosities, we import them."

These exclusive views are antagonistic to the very idea of culture. They tend to make one vain of his attainments and egostistical, and consequently result in a cramped nature and circumscribed outlook. "Culture," however, according to Emerson, "is the suggestion from certain best thoughts that a man has a range of affinities through which he can modulate the violence of any master-tones that have a droning preponderance in his scale and succor him against himself." Grand as the sight may be of naturally princely qualities, adjusted, strengthened and beautified, culture does not look to this result alone. Its clear vision is not obscured by even so imposing a structure. From its lofty height it sweeps the whole horizon, obtaining no mere partial view. It is comprehensive enough to take in all that is honest, and pure, and true, and can never dwindle into narrowness or sentimentalism. It never seeks to put us into those relations which would lift us out of sympathy with living, acting humanity; but endeavors, rather, to awaken in us that which will respond to all that is worthy in man.

That certainly is an error which seems to regard culture as aiming ever to create an elite—a very select class. A man may have good practical common sense, he may be well-read, he may vote intelligently, he may have a mind well matured by experience and softened by sorrow, he may be kind in his home and a power in his church; but, according to this shallow judgment, if he moves not in this select circle, he is uncultured. His working-clothes are the badges of only the farmer, the tradesman, or the mechanic; not the signs of the polished gentleman. Such a conception as this, however, reduces culture to mere affectation, while nothing can be more averse to its spirit than artificial show. Culture aims to develop the soul, as well as grace of speech, motion and person. How often are we impressed with the depth and beauty of character possessed by some, who, removed from the idle gossip of an empty society, have, in the calm sphere of home, or in the quiet round of daily duties, acquired a culture which diamonds, and rich attire, and polite literature, and brilliant conversation combined, have failed to give others, called in our superficial way of speaking, cultured. A rough hand is no index of a soul unrefined. "Heaven," says Emerson, "sometimes hedges a rare character about with ungainliness and odium, as the burr protects the fruit." Such a soul may not have the culture which is the product of the study of mere books, and of art; but it has a culture which is the result of experience, of intercourse with living hearts—a culture just as legitimate and noble as that which revels in books, and bric-a-brac, and old china, and antique paintings. The former grade of culture prompts one to exert his best powers for the attainment of noble purposes; the latter, possibly, urges one to "live up to the level of his blue china."

Matthew Arnold is not always a safe teacher, but in his definition of culture we get the true idea of its nature and scope. He calls it, "the study of perfection." It seeks to elevate humanity. It holds up before man the pattern of true excellence. It endeavors to bring to bear upon his spirit all that enriches, and softens, and ennobles. Culture is a refining process, a means unto an end, and that end has to do with the growth of all the better faculties of our being. It takes in its wide scope God and man, endeavoring to lift up the latter into full harmony with Him who is the source and center of all perfection. Culture does not aim to develop one part of our being. It seeks not to train the intellectual and æsthetic faculties to the neglect of the moral; neither does it strive to develop the moral nature alone. It endeavors to liberate the mind, to bring it out from its chains and darkness into the sunlight of truth, where all that is pure and elevating may make their full impress. Look not to classic Greece for the highest results of culture. She brought forth a race of remarkable men it is true. Her poets and sculptors, philosophers and orators have never been surpassed in their own peculiar departments; yet where will you find a greater lack of moral culture among a civilized people? So far as it went, her culture was as perfect as the creations of her own Phidias, but her moral sentiment was as cold and dead as his marble. Look not to fair Italy in her palmy days, when her master-painters gave to the world those matchless combinations of grace and color; superstitution, licentiousness and bitter rivalry likewise characterize that brilliant period. Look not to modern Paris, the so-called centre of "taste and refinement." Too often is culture in this fickle city, little more than the thin garb of insincerity and wickedness. Look rather to those communities where a pure religion is preached, where educational institutions flourish, and where the consequent amenities of life have their proper sway, for the highest results of culture. Well says Principal Shairp,—"Culture proposes as its end the carrying of man's nature to its highest perfection, the developing to the full all the capacities of our humanity. If, then, in this view, humanity be contemplated in its totality, and not in some partial side of it, culture must aim at developing our humanity—in its Godward aspect, as well as its mundane aspect. And it must not only recognize the religious side of humanity, but if it tries to assign the due place to each capacity,—and assign to all the capacities their mutual relations, it must concede to the Godward capacities that paramount and dominating place which rightfully belongs to them, if recognized at all. Culture must embrace Religion and end in it."

Thus exalted is the nature of culture, and thus inspiring, its aim. We should have no lower conception of its beneficent mission among men. It is, indeed, sensitive to delicate tints, graceful lines, fair proportions, poetical imaginations, and harmonious sounds. It causes the soul to respond to the beauty awakened by the chisel of the sculptor, and the painter's brush; and puts it in harmony with the worthy thought of all ages. Culture, however, does not seek to make the soul like a crystal—hard, smooth and mathematically exact,—untouched by the forces which play about it; but rather like a tree, which, sending its roots down into the rich soil, and lifting its tops towards the sky, drinks in the subtle chemistry of earth, air and sunlight, and as the result puts forth green leaves, fragrant blossoms and fair fruit—blessing while it pleases. Its aim is thus to fulfill these words of an old prophesy:—"Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle."

OME HAPPENINGS.

stus Towne, formerly a resident abody, died in Hamilton, Feb. aged 56 years, 11 months, 29 He was a son of the late John , of Salem, and a graduate of lem High School. He entered ore of Seth W. Fowle, of Boston, large apothecary establishment; becoming thoroughly acquainted he business he came to Peabody, outh Danvers, and took charge of othecary store of the late Thos. weetser. Upon the retirement of bed from active labor he pur- his stand and stock and carried he business for several years, un- siring a wider field, he returned ston in 1855 and entered partner- with the late Chas. V. Poor, under m name of C. V. Poor & Co., he has continued to the close of ngaged in the wholesale drugs, s, and oil business. He leaves a son and daughter.

e home of Eben A. Hooper, the known milk dealer of this town, been sadly afflicted. About two s ago one of the children was tak- with what they supposed was the les. Dr. Frost was summoned and d that it was a combination of scar- ever and diptheria. The rest of the ren were also taken, and Mr. Hoop- imself succumbed to the disease. Sunday last the mother of Mrs. per, Mrs. Horatio Bodge, who was d by her filial duty to assist in sing, died of putrid diptheria, and buried the next day. Monday, rence, the second son, died. The her children are seriously ill, and it feared that the oldest son cannot re- over. Mr. Hooper's symptoms are thought by the attending physician to be more favorable. The family have the sympathy of our entire community in this time of great trouble.

A case came before Justice Merrill the other day which simply illustrates how difficult it is to convict a rum-seller. One of our business men had learned of a case where a minor had been sold liquor, and he obtained a witness who said he saw the boy drink and that he would so testify in court. A warrant was procured and the saloon keeper arrested, and all were present, including a lawyer to defend the prisoner. The only witness was sworn, and testified in substance that he knew nothing about the case. And that was all the satisfaction a person gets a large part of the time.

Probably never before were the measles so prevalent in this town as they are at the present time. The attendance at some of our schools has been hardly enough to pay for holding a session and we wonder the committee don't close the schools. For instance in the Center school alone the number in the grammar classes is some 287, while the number in attendance is only 150. In the four primary rooms with a total membership of about 250, only about 70 are in daily attendance. In one room as many as thirty were known to be sick at one time.

The social party at Upton's Hall last evening was attended by some fifty couples, and was a very gratifying success to the originators as well as the participants. Music was furnished by the Cadet Orchestra. The order comprised mostly waltzes and other round dances, besides several figures of the German. There were just quadrilles and contras enough to make it interesting. The social was originated and carried out by Messrs. Hazen Spaulding and Ira F. Pray. It is hoped another will soon be given.

Stacy R. Bott died last Friday at his residence in Little's lane, aged 65 years. His wife passed away about two weeks since, and his own death had been momentarily expected. Mr. Bott formerly carried on the retail clothing business in this town, being succeeded by the late Frank B. Messer, who married his daughter. He was a strong Democrat in politics, in which he took an active interest when in business. He leaves a son, Howard, and a granddaughter. His funeral took place Sunday.

Peabody is full of inventors. It is said a young man has just applied for a patent for a device for holding up the bottoms of gentlemen's trousers to prevent them from getting wet and soiled. What a priceless boon it would be to man if some one with an eye to the beautiful could invent something that could keep the green on a brass collar button from displaying itself like a verdant meadow on a man's throat front.

The classmates, from the Wallis school, of the little Howard girl, who recently died, attended her funeral in a body last Saturday afternoon. They brought with them some very pretty floral offerings.

"G. S." Cigars—all the rage—nothing like them—at George Stevens'.

We know it isn't fair to hint an item without giving the names, but we ourselves were considerably puzzled for several days after seeing a notice in a Boston daily. "Preston Billings" of Peabody was taken in to the tomb of $28 in Boston the other night. "Preston Billings" is not very extensively known in town by that name, but it is whispered among those who are supposed to be acquainted with matters of this sort, that he is a well known society young man. Be that as it may this is the way we heard he lost his $28. Believing it to be good for his health to have a "good time" occasionally, he started for the "Hub" one pleasant morning with the above sum in his possession. After taking a few drinks, on arriving in the city he brought up at a house of questionable character, in a very happy frame of mind, and invited "Lottie," one of the inmates, to assist him in the disbursement of his money. This she very willingly complied with and must have succeeded nicely, for the next thing "Preston" knew he was on the street and "dead broke." He notified a policeman of the circumstances and by the aid of friends he returned home — it is hoped a considerably wiser youth. When he wants a good time again he probably won't go to Boston. It is too rich for his blood.

There is little doubt of a close contest, especially in the caucus to-morrow evening, between the friends of Thos. J. Relihan and those of Michael Kelly, for the nomination on the Board of Selectmen. It will be remembered that the result last year was very close; and the friends of Mr. Kelly intend this year again to take a hand in the fight. Mr. Relihan has proved himself a faithful servant of the town, as we predicted last year he would; and he has commanded the respect of those who are compelled to oppose him politically. Mr. Kelley is the junior partner of the firm of Eagan & Kelley, morocco manufacturers, in the shop formerly occupied by the late firm of W. M. Jacobs & Son, and gives employment to about forty men.

It is claimed by his friends that he would prove equally faithful to the interests of the town; that in his dealings with the business men and with his employes he has been honorable and straightforward, and that he would be an efficient man on the Board. These, among other reasons, induce his friends to give him enthusiastic support. We shall see what we shall see.

There is an article in the Warrant asking for a horse hose carriage at the houses of Hose 3 and 4. We have already expressed our opinion in favor of one at the latter place and our attention has been called to the advantages of one at the house of Hose 3. The gravel pit of the town is in the vicinity and as the steamer horses are worked only a short distance from the brick house, a horse there might be made to pay its way by being worked in the street department. We hope the finance committee who will probably have the matter referred to them will give it a careful consideration.

Our attention was called to a singular coincidence the other day. Preaching service has been held at the Alms house every Sunday for the past four weeks, the services being conducted by gentlemen from Boston, Lynn and this town, and unknown to each other the fourteenth chapter of John was read by each as a scriptural lesson. In the meantime a funeral service was held and the clergyman read from the fourteenth chapter of John.

The seats have been removed from the Universalist Church and repairs are being made there. The interior walls will be newly frescoed and painted. The size of the singers' gallery will be reduced, thus giving more space at each entrance. Mr. Calvin Pierce is doing the carpenter work and A. M. Butler of Boston will do the frescoing. It is expected he will begin next Monday. Services will be held in the vestry while the work is going on.

The following ladies are qualified to vote for School Committee at the coming annual town meeting:

Washington's Birthday was very quietly observed in this town and the streets presented a deserted appearance. The post office and banks closed in the morning and some of the stores in the afternoon. There was no session of the public schools. The sleighing was quite good and many enjoyed a pleasant drive. A fair proportion attended the play entitled '49 at Mechanic Hall in the afternoon and evening.

We have received some very interesting papers from Rev. L. L. Wood, through the kindness of Mr. A. C. Osborn.

Fannie Stone, wife of H.A.Stone, a former resident of this place, but now of Lynn, was buried in Cedar Grove Cemetery last Saturday.

It is rumored that Wm. Hayes is about to erect a house on the corner of Colfax and Washington Sts.

Master Fred Shaw had a narrow escape from a serious accident last Monday; while sliding down John Brown's hill his sled becoming unmanageable, running against a large rock, striking his head and giving him quite a shaking up.

William Brown, the glue manufacturer, is going to build a building to cover his lime pits, 120 feet long and 40 feet wide. A. Lummus will do the work.

Mrs. M. O. Stevens will give a Temperance lecture next Sunday evening in school house hall.

Mr. Wm. Hayes calls the new addition to the Washington House a horse car station, and it is said it will be used for that purpose.

Hose Company No. 5 hold their next social assembly at their hall next Friday evening. Upton & Tiney's band furnish the music.

A funny accident happened last Friday afternoon. As a gentleman named Martin from Marblehead and his wife were driving up Central street, the runners of the sleigh struck the bare plank of the railroad crossing, causing a sudden stop which threw Mrs. Martin into the street. She was assisted into the sleigh and did not appear to be much injured although she was considerably frightened.

A delegation of the Murray Association visited Beverly last Thursday to participate in the celebration of the sixth anniversary of the "Young Peoples' Association for good work." An excellent supper was enjoyed in the Odd Fellows' banqueting hall, after which short speeches were made by several Beverly ladies and gentlemen and also by Rev. Mr. Sprague of Peabody, Mr. Chas. S. Goldthwait, President of the Murray Association, George Randall and others.

While looking for items this week, and wondering what we could find among the schools it occurred to us that our neighbor, the "Reporter," about a year ago offered a prize to the school obtaining the highest percentage during the year. Upon inquiry we were unable to learn which school had it and of course were unable to give a description of it Can't you give us a little light on the subject, neighbor?

The "visiting gavel" was passed from Jefferson Council L. of H. of Malden to Fraternity Council of Lynn at a recent meeting. This is made of gold, in weight equal to 225 gold dollars, and is about six and one half inches long. It originated with Taylor Council, No. 87, of South Boston, to be passed from lodge to lodge, thus inducing fraternal visits. When will it be Peabody's turn?

The next Farmers' Institute under the auspices of the Essex Agricultural Society will be held in Salem, at Plummer Hall, on Tuesday, March 13. In the forenoon John E. Russell, Secretary at the State Board of Agriculture, will speak of the Agriculture of Massachusetts. In the afternoon Dr. Jas. R. Nichols will speak of fertilizers, especially nitrogen and its services.

Last Wednesday evening as the employes of the Press were laboring to get the paper out, Mr. Sam'l G. Southwick kindly furnished us with an excellent oyster stew; and we take this opportunity to thank him for the same, and advise any of our friends who intend at any time to have a little "set down" to let Sam do the catering and they will feel towards him as we do.

Is there any reason why the liquor dealers of the Commonwealth should be allowed a privilege on the Sabbath which is refused to dealers in the necessaries of life? Is there not as much reason for them to close their places of business on the Lord's day as the grocer, the marketman or manufacturer? Are they to have a monopoly of the Sunday traffic?

The twenty-second of February was celebrated by the Congregational society in a manner quite unique and most delightful. The gentlemen connected with the Social Circle gave a supper to the ladies, the gentlemen officiating as waiters and showing every attenton. After the supper the evening was spent with music and social chat.

Michael Regan hired a team of Mr. Starr C. Hewitt on Monday and on the following Wednesday it was found at Goldthwaite's stable in Lynn, where it had been placed by the police who found it astray. Considerable damage had been done to both horse and sleigh. Mr. Hewitt has sued him for damages.

ICY SIDEWALKS.

Is there anything which will take the natural dignity out of a man quicker than an icy sidewalk?

Let the most self-sufficient individual that ever stepped feel that at any any moment he is liable to come down at full length, and that every looker-on will feel tickled, and every young girl will giggle, and every bad boy will shout with glee, and every stray dog in the village will be there to bark over him, and his self-sufficiency will leave him, and he will shuffle along as meek as Moses, avoiding every very slippery-looking spot, and shying around the places where the gutters drip, and the housemaids have washed the windows.

Ice may be delightful in its place, which is in lemonade on the Fourth of July, and thereabouts; but as a pavement, it is a failure.

You start out some fine morning to do a little shopping. You know you are looking well. You feel sure that if Mrs. A. should meet you, she would die of envy to see how well your new hat becomes you, and Mrs. B. would turn green if she should notice the stylish hang of your overskirt. You trip along, looking in the shop-windows to see the pretty things, and admiring the reflection of pourself in the polished glass, with the silks and satins for the background of the mirror.

You arrange your frizzes at the jeweler's window, while pretending to look at the watches, and you step daintily along, and wonder what does make women wear those ugly rubbers, and you think of your own French kid boots, with their charming heels and—

Well, it has happened to many. You are lying at your length on the sidewalk, and your hat is crushed, and a dog is worrying your muff, and your paper parcels are blowing hither and thither—for the wind generally blows a hurricane when it is icy—and everybody that you know is there exclaiming and condoling, and trying to assist; and Mrs. A. and Mrs. B., securely braced, with rubbers on, are standing by and wondering how it happened, and if you are hurt, and how you ever was so imprudent as to come out without overshoes.

And they take note of the fact that you wear false bangs, and they notice that the feather of your hat is ruined, and they tell each other that poor, dear Annie Maria must use powder, for one side of her face looked quite dark, where the ice had melted, and, oh, dear! dear! it is so strange that ladies will do such things, they say, and fondly imagine that nobody ever mistrusted them of anything of the kind.

When one falls down on the ice, everybody else laughs. It seems to be just as natural as breathing. And the one who falls down is invariably mad. Mad is the word. He feels as if he could break somebody, or something. He wishes everybody else would fall down; and lie there, too. He'd be glad to see all creation heels up. He is savage with himself, and with those who are laughing at him. He wishes he had gone on the other side. He wishes he had taken the middle of the street. He wishes he had worn his other boots, or taken his cane. He wonders what ice was made for. He surveys his sodden pantaloons, and looks at his disconsolate hat, and vows he will sue the city, or the householders, or the State, or somebody, for damages!

Damages? Yes, that is a word full of meaning to the American citizen, and when there is a chance of damages he is resigned to almost any causualty.

And he buttons up his coat, puts his mashed beaver on his head, and walks off where the ice is melted most, and hears the suppressed giggle of a bevy of school girls, and feels as if he could annihilate the whole tribe from the face of the earth.

Ah, well! icy sidewalks are one of the evils of existence, and we must take them along with other troubles, and be thankful that we do not have them all the year, as they do at the North Pole. CLARA AUGUSTA.

A MUSICAL WONDER.

If we may believe the reports that reach us from Munich, there is a musical prodigy in that city such as the world has seldom seen. He is the son of an already famous artist father, David Neal, an American, who has been for many years a resident of the above-named city. At nine years of age the boy heard his own compositions played by the band of the famous Prince Royal Regiment, under Frederick Huum, and was lifted above the heads of people and musicians to receive the applause and their recognition as a composer. They called him "the new Mozart" in Munich. He is now eleven years old, is a bright, handsome boy, and is all the time composing. Some of his published compositions are exquisite, and said to be worthy of the mature musician. He improvised on the piano while he wore bibs, and expressed all his joys and griefs through his fingers. When he received the gift of one of the most learned volumes on composition, he was for days after receiving it, up at five in the morning devouring its pages. All the great musicians in Munich are watching him with much interest. Strauss has been to see him, and has spoken of his compositions in almost ecstatic terms. One of the charms in the boy's character is his modesty. He runs away from visitors, and receives the admiration of musicians with a puzzled air, and has entire disregard of public opinion and flattery. It is satisfactory to have the assurance from trustworthy authorities that he is being skilfully guided, and that he will be made into a learned musician rather than into a young wonder.

It is the part of a prudent man to conciliate minds of others, and to turn them to his own advantage.

Woman is the masterpiece.

IN WHAT WAY A PREVALENT EVIL MAY BE SHORN OF ITS POWER TO HARM.

Malaria is a broad name for many diseases—all originating in blood poisoning. Bilious fever, the typhus and typhoid fevers and chills and fever are prominent members of the family. Malaria defies alike the builders, the plumbers and the physicians. Despairing of ordinary treatment, the latter almost unanimously recommend BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER as the greatest anti-malarial specific of the age. These plasters act upon the liver, spleen, bowels and kidneys. Worn over the region of the liver, and upon the back over the kidneys, they ward off malaria like an armor. No other plasters do this.

When you purchase, satisfy yourself that the word CAPCINE is cut in the center of the plaster. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.—Highest awards at International Expositions.

WHITE ELEPHANTS.

Showmen throughout this country know Lorenzo Mayo, who is now with Chiarini's Royal Italian Circus in Singapore. The veteran John Nathans, of this city, has just received a letter from Mayo, dated at Singapore, which will be read with interest by many outside of the show business. Mayo writes: "Now I want to give you some of the news from China, Cochin China, Siam, India and Singapore. We left this place last March, playing during April in Manila to big business. Then we went to Hong Kong. We had tolerably fair houses, owing to stormy weather. Then we went to Shanghai, and played to good business. A great number of Chinese mandarins and their wives came in chairs of most elaborate workmanship and fantastic figure. Some of the wives had feet so small that they were unable to walk, and women servants carried them to seats in the show. We sent our agents to Tuchow, Amoy, Ningpoo, Swatow, and Canton. We could not obtain the sanction of the Ja-o-tais, or Governors, upon the ground that they could not guarantee us safety from mobs or disturbers of order. The people were already alarmed by the bills which bill-posters had placed upon the walls, The fearful appearance of the tigers on the bills created great excitement among the people. Great crowds collected, and they were not easily dispersed by the authorities. Orders were sent from Pekin to the Ministers and Consuls advising that the show should remain away from those places. We thought of suing for damages, but were informed that the treaty does not mention the exhibition of wild animals. We were further told that if we insisted upon showing we might not look for protection, and that the masses would probaly be arrayed against us. So we concluded to leave John Chinaman alone. Then we went to Sal-gon, in Cochin China, a French colony, and a nice place, with clean, shady streets, good hotels, and barber shops. We played to very good business. The people had never before seen a circus, and their enthusiasm cannot be described.

"From there we went to Bangkok, the capital of Siam. The King made us a proposition which we willingly accepted. We were permitted to show inside of the new building where a centennial exhibition was held. Our circus was put within this structure, so that the King, with his household, could come from his palace by a passageway made expressly for him. We gave three private exhibitions, changing the programme each time. Four Siamese carried the King on a gilded dragon-shaped chair. Following him was the Queen. Then came the inmates of his harem, one hundred or more pretty women. All these women prostrated themselves before him, and were then assigned seats behind him. The Princes and Princesses sat on the opposite side of the ring. Many soldiers were also present. The King's party was immensely pleased with the show. The palaces, temples and public buildings are magnificent. The architecture is of a kind peculiar to the country. There is more of novelty and interest to be seen in Bangkok within a few hours than can be found in China within many weeks. We had permission to visit the pagodas and colossal statuary surrounding the place. The King has fourteen very large elephants, and six or seven are small ones. He has two white elephants. The latter are kept separate from the others and are tenderly cared for. They have beds to lie upon, and are attended by four or five keepers. All the boys were very anxious to see the white elephants, but we were much surprised when we discovered that they are the same color as the black ones, the only difference being that these precious beasts have striped blue eyes, and their skin is something like a chocolate color. So you can tell Mr. Barnum that I believe he has more elephants which might pass for white ones than the King of Siam possesses. Now we are in Singapore. We shall increase our company within a few days with new artists and animals. Our route from here is to British Burmah, then Java."—N. Y. Times.

QUEER WILD DUCKS.

During the storm of Wednesday of last week, John Suter, while gunning near Watson Island, saw a pair of strange ducks on the land, and went ashore to give them chase, and one of them, catching its wing in the bushes, was easily captured. Its mate flew around the island several times, but would not stay away from its captured mate. Coming closer to Mr. Suter it was struck with an oar and caught. The pair was purchased by Mr. W. A. Hill, of the City Hotel, for ten dollars. They are of a dark-bronze color, with slightly reddish breasts, and when in the sunlight present a beautiful appearance. These ducks have been seen by visitors and sportsmen, from Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York, as well as our own duckers generally, none of whom know their names or have ever seen the kind before. The pair will weigh sixteen or eighteen pounds.—Havre de Grace (Md.) Republican.

It is the fashion to inveigh against the cold and pitiless world, but the world has often much excuse for maintaining this character. As society is now constituted, the consequences of wrong-doing are usually terrible and greatly to be dreaded, and all who have unhealthy cravings for forbidden things should be made to realize this.

There is no place in God's pure heaven for the drunkard—the morally loathsome and deformed.

Great riches have sold more men than ever they have bought out.

DURING THE LATE WAR

THE GOVERNMENT MADE ITS BEST ARMS AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS — WHAT MR. DAVID CLARK, INSPECTOR U. S. ARMORY THERE RECOMMENDS.

Your reporter found Inspector Clark at his office on the Armory grounds busily examining "receivers" for the regulation army rifles. However, he was as willing to say a word for the merits of health and strength restoratives as to prove the merits of implements of death. He said: "My business keeps me closely confined to the Armory and indoors. As a result, I've suffered considerably from indigestion and biliousness, but I find that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is a most excellent medicine for these complaints. I most cordially recommend it, for I am acquainted with its worth. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is used a great deal by the machinists in the U. S. Armory here."

While FAVORITE REMEDY is a specific in Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders and Constipation of the Bowels. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, FAVORITE REMEDY, he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. feb14—1m

New York Mercury for 1883.

Fully equipped with the finest printing machinery of the world, capable of working off 30,000 copies per hour, the NEW YORK MERCURY will enter upon its

FORTY-FIFTH VOLUME,

commencing January 6, 1883, with a determination to more than ever merit the liberal patronage which has marked its career for nearly half a century. Arrangements have been consummated, both at home and in Europe, to secure for the ensuing year many sterling novelties to increase the already incomparable variety of literary attractions which have always made the NEW YORK MERCURY a welcome guest in every home circle.

REDUCED RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

But in order to enhance the already widespread circulation of the NEW YORK MERCURY, the proprietor has determined to reduce the annual subscription rate for 1883 from Three Dollars to Two Dollars and Fifty Cents per annum, thus making it the largest, handsomest, cheapest and best family paper in the United States. Each subscriber will get comprising more than 15,000 lines of choice literature in each issue—equaling the contents of a 35 cent magazine!

THE NEW YORK MERCURY

will be mailed, postage free, for six months, for $1.25, or three months for 75 cents. Sample copies sent when requested. Address

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly, FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired. Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

WINDING UP THE CLOCK,

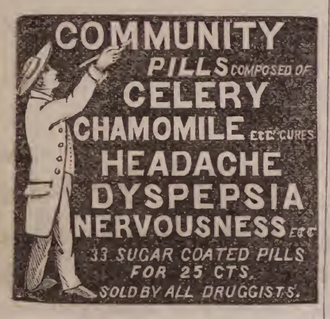
WHEN THE WEARY WHEELS WERE ALMOST STILL, A LUCKY ACCIDENT REVEALS THE LOST KEY.

"How long did you say you had it?"

"Twenty-five years."

"What! a bad cough, with occasional attacks of hemorrhage, for twenty five years? Why, man, it's a mercy that there's a dozen pounds left of you."

Abraham Orner, of Highspire, Dauphin County, Pa., stuck to his statement, and when the exclamations of wonder ceased, he added:



"Exactly. You're right. It is a mercy.—But the greatest mercy of all is that before I actually coughed myself out of existence I got hold of PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and a few bottles cured me."

"Cured you? Relieved you, you mean."

"I mean what I say; it cured me," said Mr. Orner, simply. "I feel like another man."

Please take especial notice: PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger; not a mere stomachic. The ordinary preparations of ginger are beneficial for transient aches, but at that point their value ends.—PARKER'S GINGER TONIC covers a far wider and totally different field. It attacks and dissipates radical and chronic diseases of the Lungs, Kidneys, Liver and Nerves. It is as delicious to the palate as it is prompt and effective in operation. Ginger is only one among many powerful curatives which the TONIC holds in combination. Test its virtue for that cough of yours, or for any of the ills which require an invigorant for the whole system.

And above all, do not permit yourself to be misled. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC stands alone. Nothing else is "just the same," or "just as good." Prices 50c. and $1. Economy in buying the larger size. HISCOX & Co., New York. feb14—1m

POTATO PIPES.

New uses have been discovered for the potato. The white potato. They are going to make meerschaum pipes and billiard balls out of it. Fact. When turned into a pipe it is susceptible of the highest polish, and colors more readily than the genuine clay. Naturally it is cheaper. But if meerschaum pipes are cheap, who will want them. Half the pleasure in smoking a meerschaum is because it costs a lot, and in waiting for the awful day when you will come home and see it smashed under the table. But if every fellow can have a meerschaum, not one of the old-style, heavy articles, which never would polish, but a light and airy thing which will color perfectly, nobody will want one. Does anybody want one now? Are meerschaum pipes at all the go? All of us have had half-a-dozen and more of them apiece, but goodness knows what has become of them. How we used to pet and fondle them, watch anxiously for scratches and send them up to Doll's to be boiled. We would smoke ourselves pale, and examine the bowl every half hour for the faintest speck of brown. But all that is over. The potato is to be a complete substitute for all things for which ivory is now employed, umbrella handles, chessmen, fans, everything; a substance as hard, smooth and enduring as ivory. I think I have heard of something like this before. I have known billiard balls, the severest test, it is said, to be made of something else than the tusks of an elephant, but ivory still holds the field. The process of fitting the potato for its novel work is not a long one, and is very simple. Having been carefully peeled and suffered extraction of its eyes, the potato is boiled unintermittently for thirty-six hours in a mixture of sulphuric acid and water, after which it must be squeezed in a press until every drop of natural or acquired moisture is extracted. The residuum is a hard block of a delicate, creamy-white hue, which is formed as desired. Yet does it not seem that exactly the qualities which would fit the substance for the uses of ivory would unfit it for the uses of merschaum! The methods of science are, however, inexplicable.

AN HONEST MAN'S DILEMMA.

A stranger who had made a purchase of a second-hand dealer on Chatham street grew confidential and said he would like some advice.

"Vhell, go aheadt."

"If you were in my place and wanted to go into business here, would you lend your money and live on the interest, or would you go into the second-hand clothing business?"

"My frent," replied the other, with a very serious look on his face, "let me tole you shust like a fadder. Doan' go into de second-hand beesness yourself, but lend me your money and become a silent partner."

"Are the profits large?"

"Large? How much you tinks I made on dot west I sold you for $2? I make shust twelve shillings,"

"Not by a blamed sight, for I haven't paid for it and won't take it," exclaimed the stranger, as he dropped the bundle and walked out.

"Vhell, vhell," sighed Moses as he looked after him, "efery times I tell der truth I lose money, und efery time I lie I lose a customer. How can an honest man make a living in New York?"—Wall Street News.

DELUSIONS.

The lad's desire to be a man.

The brains which leads a mob.

The desire to keep a rash vow.

That "three removes are as bad as a fire."

The friendship given you by an envious man.

The secret hatred nursed rather than give an open rebuke.

The doing of good in order to have it well spoken of.

The man who thinks zeal moves him when it is only passion.

That "prosperity always makes men monsters."

The man who chases a false tale, thinking to catch it.

He who takes all advantages brought to him by Fortune's smiling on him.

He who thinks himself a saint just because he advertised the fact that he had found a pocket-book.

That "in a thousand pounds of law there is not an ounce of love."

The person who thinks realization of folly the sole right of the aged.—Detroit Free Press.

ALARM SIGNALS.

The Municipality of Paris have decided to erect in prominent places posts for signaling to the police offices in case of an alarm of fire or other mishap. The system is the most complete of the kind yet devised. In a box at the top of the post eight buttons will be fixed, and directions will be given as to their use. Thus on pulling No. 1 a signal meaning "fire" will be transmitted along a telegraphic wire. No. 2. will signify a great fire; No. 3, an accident; No. 4, a riot; No. 5, a robbery; Na. 6, a crime with violence; No. 7, a suicide, and No. 8, a great catastrophe. A policeman will constantly be stationed near by to give verbal instructions to the public in case of need.

We never regret the kind words we have spoken, or the retort we have left unsaid, but bitterly we recall sharp words spoken angrily, and unkind actions that may have caused tears to come to eyes that will never shed them any more.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jaffa, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it."

J. E. Brierton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

COLOGNE

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March 1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print

ALL THE NEWS

of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

248 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

PEABODY.

The front of the new saloon of James E. Millea on Foster street has been exposed to view and presents a very sightly appearance. Work on this building has progressed during the dead of winter and considering this fact remarkable progress has been made. The room on the lower floor is 25x39 feet; and has a hard pine floor. The bar and shelving thereto pertaining together with the entire finish of the room, is of solid ash. The molding, cornices, doors, windows, casings, and all the trimmings were designed especially for Mr. Millea by Edwin B. Balcomb, the builder. There is a private room on the left of the front entrance connected by a door with the bar itself. This door is hung with the Prescott patent hanger, and is noiseless in its motion.—The bar was built in Boston, from designs by Mr. Balcomb. Perhaps the finest piece of workmanship is the front entrance and door, the glass being of different colors so arranged as to produce a very brilliant effect. It was furnished by Hardy Bros. of Salem.—The saloon is not ready for occupancy. Mr. Millea purposes to put in billiard tables, and possibly divide the room with partitions, and when entirely fitted up, it will be an elegant affair.—The work has been under the charge of Mr. Balcomb, Richard Skinner of Salem doing the painting, which includes some handsome frescoing on the wall, and the mason work being done by C. P. Toomey, of Danvers.

THE BATTLE OF THE BOOKS.—Alden, of "Literary Revolution" memory, is raising again the hopes and enthusiasm of those who delight in books. A few months ago his enemies thought, and friends feared, that his enterprise had met with irretrievable overthrow; but here he is again with "a larger catalogue, of better books, at lower prices than ever before." His semi-weekly Elzevir Magazine is certainly a most unique, charming, and marvelously cheap collection of gems of literature. It gives, for instance, Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," Wilson's "The Sea Serpents of Science," Farrar's "The Burning of Rome," Irving's "Rip Van Winkle," Goldsmith's "The Deserted Village, and the "Traveller," each complete, for only two cents; a "Life of Washington Irving," by the poet R. H. Stoddard, for 6 cents; Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," complete, finely illustrated, for ten cents; and numerous others like it in character and in price. If you think it incredible, send a postal card and a specimen copy will be sent you free. His monthly magazine, Choice Literature, at 25 cents a year, contains the choicest selections from the foreign magazines and reviews, in amount nearly as much as the one of the four-dollar magazines, and it is printed in excellent style; a copy of this also will be sent free upon application. Besides numerous other publications, he is issuing a series of cyclopedias, each devoted to a special subject, such as Cyclopedias of History, Biography, Poetry, Fiction, Religious Literature, Choice Prose, Wit and Humor, etc; of these he has something over thirty volumes ready for delivery, and many others to follow soon. Specimens received at this office show excellent workmanship in every respect; much superior to the average of the publications of the American Book Exchange. He wants a club agent in every neighborhood and will send catalogues with large inducements free on request. Address John B. Alden, Publisher, 18 Vesey street New York.

It is said that men ought to so appreciate the privileges of citizenship as to readily pay the poll tax assessment. While this is true, the fact is that many do not. We go farther, and claim that the welfare of the nation and the safety of our form of government demand that they be made to recognize the duties and obligations. Every obstacle should be removed from the way of the poorest or humblest citizen casting his vote, and according to his preferences; while a fine should be imposed upon all who, if able to do so, do not avail themselves of the privilege and duty. Citizenship is not only invested with high privileges so far as the individual is concerned, but by grave responsibilities also, as it relates to others. These responsibilities he must be made to feel. When indifference to the public welfare costs the imposition of a fine, it will become a thing of the past. Misgovernment and fraud and corruption in high places will then be done away, because every citizen manifests an interest in the welfare of the whole.—Lynn Union.

It is unnecessary to ask our readers to observe carefully the advertisement of the Naumkeag Clothing Co. They always read it: it is interesting reading, and where they announce such bargains as they do to-day, there is a charm lent to it which can only be appreciated by a visit.

William R. Weeks has some of the most elegant patterns of Scotch Ginghams we ever set our eyes upon. Our lady readers will appreciate the knowledge: don't believe it until you take a look at them.

FAST DAY—APRIL 5.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

By his excellency Benjamin F. Butler, Governor and commander-in Chief;
A proclamation for a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer.

In conformity with the invariable usage of this Commonwealth, and with a sense of our absolute dependence upon the beneficent parent of mankind, and of our numerous and aggravated offences against His holy will and commandments, I have thought fit to appoint, and by and with the advice and consent of the council, I do appoint Thursday, the 5th day of April next, as a day of public humiliation, fasting and prayer in this commonwealth. And I request the ministers and people of every religious denomination throughout the same to assemble on that day in their several places of worship, that we unitedly humble ourselves in the presence of Almighty God, and acknowledge, with deep contrition, our manifold sins and transgressions; that we may devoutly deprecate his judgments and implore his merciful forgiveness through the merits of our blessed Lord and Redeemer.

While we thus bow in humble adoration before the Most High, let us render him our unfeigned thanks for the numerous instances of his continued bounty toward us and our fathers, whom he planted in this fruitful soil; and, in an especial manner, that he endowed them with wisdom to render this a land of piety, freedom and order. And, inasmuch as we have disregarded their examples and neglected those principles by which they obtained and transmitted to us the inestimable blessings of the Christian religion, of law and of liberty, let us earnestly beseech him to heal our backslidings and to restore us to that temper and conduct by which alone we can hope to be happy in this world and in that which is to come.

At the same time that we look with all humility to his grace for the remission of our sins, let us, with one mind and one voice, supplicate his blessings for us and our beloved country; that he would alike preserve us from the pestilence that walketh in darkness and the destruction that wasteth at noonday; that he would graciously smile on the labors of the husbandmen, and cause the earth to bring forth her increase in due season; that he would relieve our commerce from the embarrasments with which it is burdened, and grant that prosperity may again distinguish our navigation and fisheries, so that they who "go down to the sea in ships" and do business in great waters, may have abundant reason to praise His holy name.

That He would afford success to our manufactures and prosper all the work of our hands.

That He would graciously condescend to direct the government of the United States, and give them wisdom to discern and firmness to pursue the true interests of the country; that He would preserve us from war and from all connections that lead to dishonor and adversity; that He would dispel the clouds that encompass us about, and continue to us the enjoyments of peace, liberty and religion; that He would influence the Governors of the several States to do everything within their respective spheres to preserve the union, order, tranquillity and independence of the United States: that He would protect us from the assaults of open enemies and from the snares of insidious friends; that He would suffer no weapons formed against us to prosper, but would set at naught the councils of those who devise mischief against us.

That He would vouchsafe his blessings on our university, our colleges and seminaries of learning; that He would bless all means used for propagating true religion, and promote the pious purposes of those who endeavor to disseminate a knowledge of the holy scriptures, that all may learn His will and obey His commandments.

And it is recommended that all unnecessary labor and recreation be suspended upon that day; and I do especially exhort the ministers of the gospel on that day to feed their flocks with the divine word, and not discourse upon the political and other secular topics which may divert the serious thoughts of the people from humble worship of the Father.

Given at the Council Chamber in Boston this 14th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1883, and in the 107th year of the Independence of the United States of America.

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

By His Excellency the Governor, with the advice and consent of the council.

HENRY B. PIERCE, Secretary.

God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The poet, Richard Henry Stoddard's brilliant narrative of the "Life of Washington Irving" forms No. 4 in the elegant little Elzevir Library, and is sold for the price of only 6 cents! After all, cheap and handsome books are not limited to the so-called "piratical reprints," as this illustrates: the publishers paid Mr. Stoddard $500 for the manuscript of this sketch—which is a tax of only a half-cent each, when charged over to one hundred thousand of their customers. Number 5 of the library, also just issued, contains Andrew Wilson's "The Sea-Serpents of Science," price 2 cents, and Number 6, Tennyson's famous "Enoch Arden," price 2 cents—in former years sold in large editions for $1.00, or more, per copy. And yet, these numbers are in beautiful type, handsomely printed on excellent paper. Sold by all dealers. John B. Alden, Publisher, 18 Vesey St., New York.

FLOWERS ON THE FARM.—On his farm near Rochester, N. Y., Joseph Harris last year, grew the Drummond's Phlox by the acre, as a field crop. It is one of the handsomest, hardiest and most beautiful of flowers. And Mr. Harris advises farmers, who have plenty of land, to sow large beds of it. His Catalogue for 1883 gives very minute directions for the cultivation of Phlox and other flowers. It is sent free. Address, Joseph Harris, Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y.

A BROKER'S GOOD LUCK.—Mr. F. B. Robinson, member of the N. Y. Stock Exchange, and a partner in the house of Robins & Robinson, bankers and brokers, 31 Broad street, New York, was laid up three months with severe rheumatism. He saw an advertisement of the great pain-cure, St Jacobs Oil in the New York Morning Journal, and he now says: "I bought a bottle, used it, and in two days was completely relieved. You can state, I thoroughly believe in St. Jacobs Oil. I used it and it cured me."

PENALTY FOR SIN.—Feb. 23. Wm. Quirk, selling liquor to a minor, discharged.

FEB. 26. Patrick Allen, drunkenness, case continued two weeks.

Geo. Snow of Waltham, vagrant, three months in the house of correction.

FEB. 27. James Butler, assault, discharged.

ANNUAL TOWN MEETING.

A COLD DAY.

A Large Vote Polled and Work Quickly Despatched.

The regular town meeting opened on Monday morning with the largest attendance ever known at the beginning of the meeting. After the usual formalities of the opening the balloting for Moderator was proceeded with, which lasted half an hour, the Board of Selectmen being present and on the platform. After the balloting had ceased Henry H. Proctor stated that in his judgment the balloting had not been legal, inasmuch as the check lists had not been used. He was careful to call the attention of the meeting to this fact before the votes were counted, and while the result was uncertain. Mr. Poor stated that the balloting had been done as was customary at previous meetings, and that while the check list was on the table the names had not been checked. Mr. Farnham admitted that the law stated that the check list should be used, and he questioned if it had not been so used sufficiently to clear the law. Mr. Poor decided that the voting was illegal, inasmuch as the law required the lists to be used, and that it must be gone over with properly. Mr S. F. Blaney wanted everything fair. He had deposited his vote honestly and thought every man in the hall had done so. If any action had been taken which was illegal or which would make the action of the meeting so, let it be righted, and let us proceed legally with the business of the meeting. Mr. Munroe moved that the polls be left open for the choice of Moderator until 1 o'clock. Several amendments were offered and voted down. One to adjourn for a week, another to close the polls at eleven o'clock, during which discussion Hon. B. C. Perkins raised the point that the vote which had already been taken was the only legal one, in his judgment, that could be taken to-day. Mr. Farnham thought it could not stand; that reasonable notice should be given, and that the time previous to one o'clock was a reasonable notice. S. F. Blaney wanted gentlemen to keep their heads level, that it was not law but common sense that was needed. The clerk had called for the votes for Moderator; he has decided that the voting was irregular, and that being the case, the only thing to do was to proceed fairly. We are in for the battle, and it can just as well be done here and now. He was not in favor of adjourning, but of balloting at once for Moderator. The question was finally put, and it was decided by an almost unanimous vote to keep the polls open until one o'clock. The voting was then proceeded with.

The vote for Moderator during the forenoon and the noon hour was very exciting—and the largest vote was cast for Moderator ever thrown in town. Promptly at one o'clock the polls were declared closed and the result was as follows:

Whole number of votes, 776.

Amos Merrill,	465
Sidney C. Bancroft,	311

Mr. Merrill was declared elected amid great applause, and called upon Rev. Mr. Sprague of the Universalist Church to offer prayer.

On motion of Frank E. Farnham it was voted that the polls for the election of such officers as are required by law to be chosen at this time, be kept open from 4 till 8 o'clock, P. M.

The following officers were then elected by hand vote:

Fence Viewers—John F. Pickering, John Perkins, Abraham C. Osborne, Patrick Kirwin, Bowman Viles.

Surveyors of Lumber—Chas. G. Folsom, John Hackett.

Field Drivers—William S. Osborne, Orrin R. Evans, Daniel W. Putnam, Harrison Taylor, Daniel Haskell, Andrew Carter.

Pound Keepers — Edwin Buxton, Robert P. Brown.

It was voted that four measurers of wood and bark be appointed by the selectmen.

The following articles were then referred to the finance committee:

9th. To determine what amount of money shall be raised for the usual and necessary expenses of the town, when it shall be paid into the treasury, and the rate of interest to be charged on delinquent taxes.

10th. To appropriate money for the payment of State aid to soldiers and their families.

11th. To determine what compensation shall be paid to town officers and firemen the ensuing year.

12th. To determine the manner of repairing the highways and bridges.

13th. To determine what sum of money shall be raised for the repairs of highways and bridges, and how it shall be appropriated.

14th. To see if the town will appropriate money for lighting the streets.

15th. To see if the town will appropriate money for a day and night police.

16th. To determine what sum of money shall be appropriated for the support of schools.

17th. To determine in what manner the money arising from the surplus dog fund and the town's proportion of the income of the Massachusetts School Fund shall be disposed of.

18th. To see if the town will authorize the Town Treasurer to hire money the ensuing year.

25th. To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending, repairing and carrying on the water works.

29th. To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of putting in an Automatic Electric Fire Alarm, or take any action in relation to the same agreeably to a vote of a majority of the Board of Engineers of the Fire Department.

32d. To see if the town will appropriate three thousand dollars for extending the water pipe from its present terminus at County street, through Lynn street as far as the estate of Samuel K. Newhall, also from its present terminus at County street as far as the estate of the late Henry Newhall, agreeably to the petition of Lewis K. Putnam and others.

37th. To see if the town will extend the water pipes from Tremont street through Holly street, and appropriate money therefor, agreeably to the petition of A. F. Clark and others.

41st. To see if the town will appropriate a sum of money sufficient to extend the water pipes from Lynn street through Brown and Maple streets to County street, aggreeably to the petition of George E. Parker and others.

S. F. Blaney moved that a finance committee of five be chosen and that the present Board of Selectmen be that committee: this was so ordered and it was evidently a surprise to the meeting which did not realize what had been done until Mr. Blaney further moved that in future that body be instructed to make an estimate of the needs of the different departments of the town and submit it in print in the annual report. This called the chairman of the Selectmen to his feet, who hoped the motion would not prevail, and that in his judgment it was a delicate matter for that body to fix their own salaries. Mr. Blaney again suggested that the experience of the Selectmen during the year, and their acquaintance with the wants of the departments of the town better fitted them than any body of citizens who could be chosen to recommend appropriations to the town; he could not see the force of the objection. Rufus H. Brown thought a committee of citizens better; that they should act as a sort of auditing committee, and be a check on what might be extravagant appropriations. He could see no advantage in doing away with the old plan. Mr. Blaney explained that his object was not to constitute the Selectmen a finance committee; not that their action should be final; but simply to gain information which they could give better than any other one. This was all that Mr. Blaney contemplated, and in the discussion of the merits of the proposed recommendations the meeting seemed to be unaware that they had already chosen a finance committee. When so informed by the Moderator, after repeated questions, Mr. Southwick moved a reconsideration of the vote whereby the present Board of Selectmen were constituted a finance committee. Frank E. Farnham moved that seven citizens, together with the Selectmen, constitute the committee. This was not agreed to, and the motion to reconsider was carried by a vote of 77 to 3. Mr. Farnham then moved that such committee consist of five citizens to be nominated from the floor. Henry H. Proctor moved to amend by substituting seven citizens to be appointed by the chair. The amendment was carried by a vote of 87 to 44, and the finance committee was announced by Mr. Merrill later in the afternoon, as follows:

Charles B. Farley, George F. Sanger,
Thomas Carroll, S. F. Blaney,
George C. Pierce, William F. Wiley,
Rufus H. Brown.

Voted, To have the bells rung at noon and at nine o'clock, P. M.

Hon. A. A. Abbott moved that Article 40 and such other articles as can not be reached be postponed until the adjourned meeting. Article 40 was of interest to him, and was liable to provoke some discussion. S. F. Blaney thought it was of interest to the whole meeting and moved that it be taken up at once. Rufus H. Brown addressed the chair, and said that he could not, as he felt to-day, vote for the removal of the Monument. He found that the sentiment of the people was strongly divided, and that many were opposed to its removal. He was in favor of waiting until the track of the horse railroad was located. Perhaps some land could be bought by the town and the street widened. There appears to be difficulty in regard to its future location, if removed: some citizens favored Cedar Grove, others the old burying place, the Institute grounds and other locations. He feared the Monument would be like a man without a country; it would be left without an abiding place. He therefore could not vote for its removal, and moved that the matter be indefinitely postponed, which was agreed to by a unanimous vote.

Voted, To accept the list of jurors prepared by the Board of Selectmen, which was read by the Moderator.

The report in relation to guide boards was read. They were all in good condition and in their proper locations. The report was signed by the Selectmen and accepted by the meeting.

The report of the Trustees of the Peabody Institute, which had been printed in accordance with a vote of the town last year, was accepted.

The report of the Trustees of the Cedar Grove Cemetery was accepted, and the recommendation therein contained referred to the finance committee.

The report of the Water Board, which was contained in the annual town report, was accepted.

Voted, That the town authorize the Selectmen to purchase land for gravel.

Voted, That the town appoint the Selectmen its agents to act in any suits that may be brought against the town, with authority to employ such attorneys as they may think necessary in such suits.

Voted, That the town accept the report of the Selectmen laying out Berry street as a highway, and that $200 be appropriated therefor.

Mr. Blaney moved that articles 29, 30 and 31 be passed for the present; these being the articles in reference to a fire alarm and hose carriages.

Article 33d was then considered "to see if the town will pay a reasonable compensation for services rendered this last season in efforts to prevent the fire from spreading over a large tract of woodland in the vicinity of the town farm, agreeably to the petition of D. R. Davis and others." James P. King was in favor of paying the men. He wanted the matter decided if we, who own woodland and are taxed for it, are not to be protected in case of fire. He knew something about fighting fires in the woods. In the town of Wakefield firemen are called out. If such fires are not to be extinguished, and if the town were not willing to pay for it, he wanted the Selectmen to keep away from such property in making up their valuation lists, and he moved that the bills be paid. Mr. Farley offered an amendment that it be referred to the Selectmen and another one was offered referring it to the Board of Engineers. Mr. King at first was disposed to accept either amendment, but finally declined. He wanted the men paid. They had done their best to protect property, and now these men come forward and ask to be paid. He thought they should be encouraged, that they might have the assurance that if called upon again they would receive compensation. S. F. Blaney said there must be two sides to this question and although he did not know the other one, it looked as if something was being covered up. If we gave the men too much encouragement, we might encourage them to set the woods on fire. He wanted the town to know if, when the fire was discovered the owner of the property went to the proper officers and made a complaint, and if so, did they attend to it? He thought the town ought to know the particulars. O. F. Newhall said that when the fire first broke out, it was extinguished, as he supposed. It was afterwards burning and Mr. Vittum notified the engineers, who came up and said nothing could be done. Mr. Brown also notified them and came down personally. Mr. Newhall had no bill against the town, and no axe to grind. He thought it should be known whether protection was to be given to the owners of such property. Mr. Littlefield said that all the requests of the different gentlemen had been granted. He had done all in the power of the department to do. Mr. Brown was in favor of paying the men—it could be but a small sum, but he wanted it to apply only to the bills already presented. Mr. King wanted any bills known to be out, to be paid, if in the judgment of the Selectmen they should be. He was willing to leave it to them. It was finally so agreed, by a vote of 144 in the affirmative.

Article 34th, To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of constructing a common sewer in and through Spring street, terminating in Goldthwait's Brook, agreeably to the petition of George Clerk and others, was referred to the Selectmen and Board of Health, to report at the adjourned meeting.

Voted, That the town appropriate the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, to assist Union Post No. 50, G. A. R., in defraying the expenses of Memorial Day, May 30th, 1883, agreeably to the petition of C. T. Batchelder and others.

The following articles were referred to the Selectmen to report at the adjourned meeting:

38th. To see if the town will take any action in regard to improving the drainage on Sylvan street, in the vicinity of Pike & Whipple's Factory, and appropriate money therefor.

39th. To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of working and grading certain portions of Washington and Lynn streets, should such expenditure become necessary in consequence of the contemplated widening of such portions of said streets.

The following articles were referred to a special committee appointed by the chairman:

30th. To see if the town will cause a Horse Hose Carriage to be located at the house of Hose Co. No. 3, and appropriate money sufficient to purchase a Horse and Apparatus, and to cover the expense of making the necessary alterations in the building for the convenience of said apparatus, agreeably to the petition of George Clerk and others.

31st. To see if the town will appropriate money for the purchase of a Horse Hose Carriage, Horse and Harness, to be located at the house of Hose Company, No. 4., agreeably to the petition of Benjamin S. Wheeler and others.

Mr. Merrill appointed the following as the committee: William P. Clark, Isaac Hardy, George C. Peirce, William T. Dole, Alexander B. Merrill.

It was then voted to choose three Overseers of the Poor, Twenty Constables, five Selectmen and Assessors, and five Board of Health.

It was then voted that when the meeting adjourn it adjourn for two weeks, at one o'clock P. M.

THE VOTE.

The following is the result. Those marked with a star are elected. It will be seen that in every instance where the caucus nominations differed from the independent citizens' ticket, they were defeated:—

The vote was as follows on the question: Shall licenses be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town?

Yes,	585
No,	348

Nine ladies voted for School Committee.

Martha M. Cutler, Eliz. S. Osborne, 2d
Mary J. Floyd, Lydia A. Reed,
Sarah P. Farnham, Harriet A. Sumner,
Mary E. Moore, Mary O. Stevens,
Abigail E. Teel.

Previous to the counting of the votes Frank E. Farnham moved that two more gentlemen be added to the committee to whom was referred the article in the warrant regarding a new Horse Hose for Hose Co. No. 3, and that they be appointed by the chair from the locality of the company. This was agreed to and the Moderator appointed E. P. Barrett and S. H. Buxton.

At the close of the voting large numbers remained in the hall while the counting was going on, and much interest was manifested, until the announcement of the vote for Selectmen, when the hall was comparatively cleared. A few, however remained, until the vote for Constables was declared, which was about midnight.

Merrill & Mackintire have removed their entire book, stationery and wall paper business to the store No. 220 Essex St., (opp. Hale's Building) which they have enlarged by building an addition for their room paper department, 20x30 ft., making their store 70 ft. long with plenty of light and well adapted to the wants of their large and increasing business. They carry the largest stock in their line in the county, and just now they are having a clearance sale of room papers, which they are selling at prices less than the original cost.

Collier & Rice's Company will present "Iolanthe" at Mechanic Hall next Monday evening. This is not the Company that appeared last time in Salem, but is equal in every respect to any presentation of the popular opera. During its presentation calcium lights are used, of different colors, the gas being turned down in the hall, and the result, with the fine costumes, is a spectacle of enchanting beauty.

John P. Peabody has a new announcement this week. The ingenuity of Mr. Peabody's resources knows no bounds; and he is ever on the alert for bargains to please his customers. His sale now in progress is no exception, as is evidenced by the trade at his store.

Poet's Corner.

The Miner's Protege.

Wal, you see, it's a queer story, Missy;
The little gal's none of our kin;
But you bet, when the old men go under
She's the one who will handle our tin.
My pard an me's rough minin' fellers
We've got nary children nor wife,
But we love little yellow haired Nellie,
An' we'll rear her up right—bet yer life.

How old? Wal she's nigh eight, I reckon
Five years since we brought her out here;
An' she was the cunnin'est baby
We'd looked at for many a year.
You see 'twas the time the Apaches
Broke out. Blast the red imps of sin!
The emigrant train crossed their trail, Miss
An' the Injuns they scooped 'em all in.

Yes, thar lay men, children 'an wimmin;
The red devils raised all their ha'r.
We couldn't do nothin' to help 'em,
So my pard 'an me buried 'em thar.
We found one likely lookin' young cretur'
Lyin' out from the rest of the heap
She was dead like the rest, 'an Nellie
Lay close by her side—fast asleep.

Wal, 'twas nigh ninety mile to the settlement,
Bill and me turned the thing in our mind;
An' at last we concluded to keep her
And bring her up lovin' and kind.
We buried her poor dad 'an mammy
Likewise all their unlucky mates;
An' we named her Nell, arter a sweetheart
My pard had once back in the states.

But the trouble we had with that young un
Was somethin' quite funny to see;
Bill gave her up for a mystery,
Likewise she was too much for me;
Her durned duds we couldn't get on right,
An' we cussed ev'ry but'n an' string;
But arter a spell we did better
When we once got the hang of the thing.

An' she growed up quite pert-like an' bloomin';
We take her to work ev'ry day
While Bill an' me's busy minin'
She'll sit on the rock pile an' play;
An' she's made better men of us both Miss
We don't cuss now, nor go on no spree,
Cause we're workin' and savin' for Nellie,
The pride of my old pard an' me.

In General.

"NOT TO DO IT IS WRONG."

The conductor must register for every fare
Taken from the pockets of the passengaire.
The black-faced clock for the "ticket" fare,
The white-faced clock for the six-cent fare,
A clock being placed in each end of the caire
That all may witness the registaire.

But 'tis somewhat hard on the conductaire
That his duty by no means endeth there.
He must keep his eye on each passengaire,
And be all ready to stop the caire.
Or quickly the cord of the registaire
Will be pulled six times by some lady fair
Who wants to get off just beyond Park square,
And fears the conductor won't leave her there.
But doesn't know she pulls out a fare
From the hard-earned pay of the conductaire
Each time she pulls with an injured air,
And wonders what makes the conductor swear.

Another card should be framed with care.
Just for the good of the conductaire,
And for further instructing the passengaire,
"Don't pull the bell of the registaire;
TO DO IT IS WRONG! and so beware,
Unless you are willing the wrong to repair
By reimbursing the conductaire."

The Way of Life.

BY JOHN VANCE CHENRY.

The warrior frowned and pressed his temples gray;
"Enough," he cried, "away with love—away!"

A boy from play by fondest kiss beguiled,
"Mother, I'll love thee ever!" spake the child.

A maiden gazed into the night sky wide—
"Oh, I will love him when he comes!" she sighed.

These three moved on along the way of life:
A fair face lured the soldier from his strife,
Upon a tomb was carved the sweet child's name,
The lover to the maiden never came.

Original Story.

(For the Press.)

The Broken Valve.

Having been yard master on the R. E. R. for a number of years I was necessarily quite well acquainted with the numerous engines, engineers and firemen who daily passed and re-passed my little box-like office in the freight yard at S;—and when the new yard at P—was laid out and graded, I received orders from my superiors to take myquarters up there; so of course I was obliged to go.

The night of my departure, while on the depot platform awaiting the arrival of the through express, it occurred to me that it would be much more pleasant to ride in the engine, and as in all probability the new and powerful "49" would take the train through, I determined to share Jack Green's seat and watch him as he drove her through the ninety intervening miles between S—and P—.

Promptly at 6.30 the heavy express thundered into the depot on her schedule time, and the "49," as I supposed her engine to be, stopped under the smoke jack with her mawhole directly under the water pipe, and before her wheels had barely ceased to turn, her tender was being filled with water and coal, and Jack was upon the ground beside her, feeling of the boxes, oiling the journals and cross-heads, and lighting the head-light; for we made but one stop during the entire run.

I climbed aboard of her and seated myself upon Jack's box, and by the time I was fairly settled into the narrow space he was beside me with his hand upon the throttle awaiting orders to "go ahead."

A stroke of the gong over my head was accompanied by a hiss and rush of the pent up steam as Jack gradually pulled open the throttle, and with accelerated motion we began to leave the depot behind us and wind out into the open country; and as I watched Jack as he stood beside me with his eye upon the yard semaphores and switches I could but admire the man. His face was begrimmed, but beneath the dust and oil I could see the frank determined man who must have undergone many a danger to obtain the highest aim of a locomotive driver, that of running a fast express.

While seated there I was reminded of a story he often related about himself and his early days upon the road, and I will give it to you as nearly correct as I can.

"When I first began firing I was with Frank Converse on the way freight from S—h, and we had the old Rockport which long ago found her way to the iron pile. She ought to have been taken from the irons long before we had her, but as our freights were not heavy and we made but one trip a day, the Co. kept her running, with now and then a visit to the repair shop. She had neither air-brake nor any modern appliances; her stack was tall, her driver was more than six feet above the rails, and her blow-pipe valve rod had long since been wrenched off by some impatient boy at the round house, but she was considered sound and as she answered our purpose we ran her daily from the yard at S—at 5.20 A. M. reaching H— at 11.55; then we shifted out our train, made it up and started on our return trip at 6.05 reaching S—at 8 10; then we ran to B—8 miles below and upon a turnout to wait for the express which passed us on its way to S—,and having got water and made up a part of our next day's train which the night shifter brought up for us, we came back to the round house and put up for the night.

Well, one night as usual we pulled the pin, left the freight on the siding at S—and started for B—. It was a rainy, drizzly night and both Frank and I wished we had the Rockport in her stall; but go we must, so Frank eased open her throttle and with the fire-box well filled we started down the road, slowly at first on account of the switches, but as soon as we had left them behind, with lever almost on center and the throttle open a good bit we swayed and vibrated over the rails at a good rate.

It had turned from a drizzle into a cold, blustering rain, and as we looked in silence from our respective cab windows, we could see by the steady rays of the head-light the glistening rails a hundred yards ahead form an apex, and as we dashed toward it the sleepers seemed to move toward us, slowly at first, then more quickly, and as we were almost over them, disappear in a black confused mass beneath us, as they were thrown beneath the focus of the powerful light above them.

So we vibrated on; the rain blown by the fitful wind dashed against the cab windows, while inside we were warm and cosy. We had run past the flag station at W—,and just as we had thundered under the over head bridge beyond it we were both nearly thrown from our seats by a quick heavy lurch of the engine, which seemed to rack her in every part. Frank seized the throttle to shut off the steam and tried to reverse her, while I set the brake and then jumped upon the tender—expecting to see another engine's cow-knocker under our tail light or one of our lined trucks gone. But no engine; the track behind us was obscured by the wet, unpenetrable blackness, made blood red for a few feet by our tail light on the tender's rail.

I never saw an engine go as the Rockport did then. The sparks fairly spouted from her stack and then flew like minature rockets, upon the cab, past it and upon the ground on either side, while the heavy machine shot along the rails as if she had been hurled from some enormous catapult. As she struck the heavy curves I instinctively clutched the nearest steady object to hold myself to the seat, while the engine seemed like a maddened creature as she bounded along the track, threatening each instant to jump the irons and bury us mangled but living beneath the live coals and scalding water.

Frank had pushed in the throttle, but to no avail; her speed was not even slackened. It was evident that she was beyond our control, for the heavy head of steam had burst the throttle valve in the dry pipe, so that the steam could not be shut from her cylinders. We could not reverse her on account of the great pressure in the steam chests, so there we were, rushing toward the turnout upon which we were to wait until the express passed.

If we passed the switches we would run into the express engine, and a horrible death would be inevitable.

The hot flames leaped from the fire-box door, and the lower part of the stack was red hot from the great draft occasioned by our terrific speed, and as we stood there, our eyes fixed ahead, our bodies swaying with the engine, we saw the switch light at the turnout,—passed it,—and it was gone.

I glanced at Frank; his face was rendered more ghastly by the reflecting of the red cab lantern upon it. Suddenly he steadied his way to my side and shouted in my ear, "I am afraid it's no use, Jack; we can't stop her. If we hit that fast express, good-bye." Then he resumed his place and a tremor shook his frame as he looked ahead; for away through the night at right angles we could see the head-light of the express as it labored up the heavy grade.

Frank stood at his post, one hand upon the useless throttle the other upon the lever.

Suddenly he threw open the box which formed his seat, seized a heavy hammer, then kneeling upon the cab-floor he pulled the pin couping the engine and tender, cast off the chains, and the freed tender slowly separated from the flying engine. Then he lowered himself to the step and began hammering the blow pipe valve. As he hung there the hot cinders flew mercilessly over his unprotected face and hands while the jolts of the engine wrenched his supporting arm almost beyond endurance. At last came a short hiss, a gurgle and a hoarse roar, as the escape steam burst from the broken valve; and I saw Frank stagger into the cab and sink upon the floor. The speed of the engine was gradually slackened, and at last she came to a stand, still like an exhausted, wounded creature; her stack and flues at an almost white heat, just as we were rounding a curve.

I knew the express must be due and seizing the cab lantern I ran around the curve, shouting and swinging the lantern like a mad man. The express engineer saw the light, reversed his engine, whistled for brakes and stopped as he rounded the curve ahead and came within full sight of the old '49.'

We hastened to the runaway engine and found Frank as I had left him, but the escaping steam and boiling water had done its work; and when, after many unconscious hours, life returned, the brave man's eyes were lost forever."

FRIENDS NOT LOVERS.—"What a pity it is that the thousandth chance of a gentleman becoming your lover should deprive you of the pleasure of a free, unembarrassed, intellectual intercourse with the single men of your acquaintance." The pity of it is that the girl of the period so often has no desire for this unembarrassed and sensible friendship, and values the men she knows only in proportion as they minister to her pleasure or vanity. And this superficial and unreal valuation prevents her from getting honestly and thoroughly acquainted with any man—from seeking him as he is seen by his own mankind, or as he would show himself in the stress and strain of real life, with its vital interests and stern realities, when the heyday and playday of youth should be over. To put aside, as far as possible, the thought of marriage until compelled to think of it by some strong and special attraction toward some special person, is wiser than to be seeking in every chance acquaintance the possible husband or wife. "We shall meet the people who are coming to meet us," no matter in what far off land their journey toward us begins.—Our Continent.

Mr. Hoar, who was chosen as his own successor recently, was first elected as United States Senator in 1877 as successor to Geo. S. Boutwell, who had succeeded Henry Wilson (who had succeeded Julius Rockwell of Pittsfield), who served from 1855 to 1873, when he was chosen Vice-President. Judge Rockwell succeeded Edward Everett, who served only a year and followed John Davis of Worcester, who was elected to the Senate for the second time in 1845, as the successor of Isaac C. Bates of Northampton. In 1875, Mr. Dawes succeeded William B. Washburn of Greenfield, who had succeeded Chas. Sumner in 1874. Mr. Sumner was elected in 1851 to the place which had been held by Daniel Webster, though Robert C. Winthrop and Robert Rantoul, Jr., had divided about a year between them, the former having been appointed by Gov. Briggs 1850, and the latter having been elected by the Free Soilers in 1851, for the short term of a few months. Mr. Webster had held the place from 1845 to 1850. Then he resigned to go into President Fillmore's cabinet, but subsequently he followed Rufus Choate, who, in 1841, followed Mr. Webster and served four years.

It is to be hoped that the legislature will pass, by a strong vote, the resolution calling upon Congress to expunge the resolution of censure which, under the pressure of an unjust public sentiment, were years ago passed upon Hon. Oakes Ames, whose tireless energy carried forward to a successful consummation the building of an iron highway across the continent, the need of which has so long been felt. It is time that justice was done to the memory of this remarkable man, and his reputation vindicated from the aspersions cast upon it by malignant enemies.—Lynn Union.

The "generosity" of the great millionaires is heralded from one end of the land to the other when they contribute an infinitesimal percentage of their vast property to some deserving object, and congratulations are poured upon them. But the charities of multitudes of humble philanthropists, measured by their ratio to the donor's entire estate, are vastly greater and more deserving of commendation. Those who can afford to be generous, too often lack the disposition. The mayor of Milwaukee calls Jay Gould "a noble philanthropist," because of a small contribution from his plethoric purse. With his vast fortune, wrung from the people, it would seem as though he might more frequently follow out the philanthropic impulse. At the best, it would be only making restitution of gains that were ill gotten. —Lynn Union.

TO PREVENT CONTAGION.—Frequently moisten the hands with Darby's Prophylactic Fluid so as to retain the refreshing odor about the person. Expose the Fluid about in earthenware plates or saucers. Use in the water for bathing, for gargling the throat, washing out the mouth, and sometimes taking a few drops internally.

The firm of Osgoodby & Co., so called advertising agents, are again in the war path. This time it is a column adv., all composition, of Dr. Bush's Medical Association. We notice some of our exchanges have swallowed the bait.

Book Notices.

We have just received from Saalfield's Music Store, 12 Bible House, N. Y., and 16 Jackson street, Chicago, the February number of the Saalfield Ten Cent Libraries. These series of monthly publications to which the subscription is only one dollar, (12 numbers) single numbers 10 cents, are revolutionizing the music business. Think of buying 16 pages of music for 10 cents. It is wonderful! The number at hand contains a waltz on Gilbert & Sullivan's latest opera, "Iolanthe," the popular "Silver Line," as sung by Lillian Russel, the "Langtry Waltzes" by Operti, the comic song, "O, you little Darling," and a popular old piece for the piano, "Amaryllis," by Gliys. The March number is to contain a complete Potpourri on "Iolanthe," and the Patti Waltzes. Mr. Saalfield, whose name these series bear, is the Pioneer of the Five Cent Music business which has done so much to reduce prices, and in the publication of these monthly Libraries seems to have primarily as his object the distribution of good music at low prices to the masses. Send 10 cents for a sample copy of these publications, or, better still, $1 for a year's subscription, to the publishers, 12 Bible House, New York.

The March Wide Awake will be eagerly snapped up by boys of ambition and vim, in order to finish what the "Eighty-three Business Men" have to say about "Our Business Boys." Part II. of this important contribution to young folks' literature is entitled "Rocks of Danger," and is as vigorous and to the point as "Secrets of Success" in the February number. From this article the boys will probably turn to Fred Ober's Yucatan serial, "The Silver City," or to Rev. Irving L Beman's story of "Evan Cogswell's Ice Fort," or to Edward Everett Hale's To-day Talk about the dead French statesman, Gambetta, or to "A Boy's Work-shop," or to Prof. Sargent's "Health and Strength Paper," or to Mrs. Cheever's jolly out-of-doors story, "Camp Hamperford"—for all these contributions, interesting to everybody, are of peculiar interest to the boys. Mrs. L. T. Craigan has a good story, "Ellie's Holocaust;" Miss Harris concludes her history of a botanical experiment, "A Winter Garden;" and there are hosts of other good things.

The children will have a treat when they get the March number of "Our Little Ones and The Nursery." The pictures are beautiful and the stories are excellent. The magazine is a fine specimen of elegant typography.

Good Cheer is the name of one of the best family papers we have ever seen. Its monthly pages are filled with pure, wholesome literature by well-known writers, and the publication is rapidly meeting with the success it deserves. It is edited by Kate Upson Clark and published at Greenfield, Mass.

Shorthand News is the name of an excellent phonographic magazine published by Brown & Holland, Chicago, Ill. Every shorthand writer should have it. $2 a year or 20 cents a number.

The March number of the Young Ladies' Journal has been received from the International News Company of New York. It is one of the most valuable publications we have on our exchange list. The very latest spring styles with descriptions of fabrics, trimmings, millinery, etc., are given. The supplement sheet alone contains more fashion plates than two or three ordinary fashion magazines. This is an English publication and contains the latest Paris fashions. Any of our lady readers who are undecided how to make up their spring dresses should consult this magazine. For sale by the Peabody News Company.

ELY'S CREAM BALM has completely cured me of Catarrh, of which I have been afflicted over ten years, after trying almost every remedy recommended, none having proved so effective and thorough. S. J. Aiken, Wholesale dealer in Boots and Shoes, 143 Federal St., Boston, Mass.

MAN AND FOOD.

Speaking roughly, about three-fourths, by weight, of the body of man is constituted by the fluid he consumes, and the remaining fourth by the solid material he appropriates. It is, therefore, no figure of speech to say that food makes the man. We might even put the case in a stronger light and affirm that man is his food. It is strictly and literally true that "A man who drinks beer thinks beer." We make this concession to the teetotalers, and will add that good sound beer is by no means a bad thought factor, whatever may be the intellectual value of the commodity commonly sold and consumed under that name.

It cannot obviously be a matter of indifference what a man eats and drinks. He is, in fact, choosing his animal and moral character when he selects his food. It is impossible for him to change his inherited nature, simply because modifications of development occupy more than an individual life, but he can help to make the particular stock to which he belongs more or less beery or fleshy or watery, and so on, by the way he feeds.

We know the effect the feeding of animals has on their temper and very natures; how the dog fed on raw meat, and chained up so that he cannot work off the superfluous nitrogenized material by exercise, becomes a savage beast, while the same creature fed on bread and milk would be as tame as a lamb. The same law of results is applicable to man, and every living organism is propagated "in its kind," with a physical and mental likeness. This is the underlying principle of development.

Happily, the truth is beginning, though slowly and imperfectly, to find a recognition it has long been denied. It is possible that in the natural desire to secure the best and purest supplies of food and drink for a man, we are pushing matters to extremes and becoming ridiculous. Utopia is a long way off, and "Hygeia" has not yet been built. It is, however, desirable that we should aim high and make the teachings of physiological science the precepts of our daily life and conduct. We may not be able to reach our ideal, but progress will be advanced by striving to make its attainment an object.

"What to eat, drink, and avoid" is a rational proposition, and if some of us are becoming a little unreasonable in the attempt to solve it, at least we are on the right road, and ought to be encouraged rather than abashed by the not unkindly criticism our endeavors are calling forth.

THE AMERICAN MULE.

At the close of the revolution hardly any mules existed in the confederacy. Washington discovered that in the southern climate the draught horse did not flourish, and he sent abroad, not for foreign sons in-law, but for jacks and jennies. The King of Spain sent him three from the royal stud, Lafayette sent three from the Island of Malta, he crossed the breeds and made matrons of his old coach horses, and from Mt. Vernon proceeded the monastic animals, which multiplied by the example and made the south to bloom and boast.

I have often waded my horse, during the rebellion, in the all but bottomless roads our armies advanced over, and my heart sank with my stirrups in dread that neither I nor my country could ever rise again, and when I thought of the thousands of miles we must yet march in slough and sand dessert to assert the authority of the flag of Washington, I felt that nothing could pull us through, till suddenly on the night wind would come a sound that was like a trumpet peel from the clouds, it hushed the lamentation of the whip-poor-will and made the screeching owl modest in his mocking. It was the faithful, the tough, the unsentimental, the unmusical, the undaunted, the Washington mule pulling the Union out of the first ditch and onward to the last ditch, and I seem to hear in his bray the mighty voice of that chief who saw farther into the necessities of his country than constitution makers or moral philosophers, and, spared by Providence the curse of foolish posterity, died the father of his country—and of the mule.—George Alfred Townsend.

PULLMAN CAR GENEROSITY.

A Pullman car porter has been telling a St. Louis reporter about the earnings of the employes on those cars. Drummers are liberal, young married men are good, women are very bad, millionaires worst. "I had a sad illustration of that a few weeks ago. Col. Gillette, a millionaire mine owner (traveling with Bonanza Mackey), gave me a dollar. He said with a terrible stutter, 'It is all the ch-ch-ange he had." It was somewhat of a blow, but I went in and got Mr. Mackey out for his brush. He fumbled around among a lot of keys and finally fished out 50 cents! By jinks! I was mad, but I couldn't say anything. It's so with most rich men. There's Gov. Tabor, he's about as good as any of 'em, but he never gives me more than a dollar. There's Senator Jones, he went to Deming once with me and gave me $5. On the other hand, Senator Fair, who is fifty times richer than Jones, they say, came up once and he only gave me $1. He was nice about it, though—spoke so kind, and told me not to spend my money foolishly. Politicians, when they get money, are mighty good. There's Dorsey, the Star route man. When he goes down to his ranch he always gives me a handful of silver—don't stop to count it." The worst of all are old ladies, who want bags and parcels carried, but never give aught but thanks; in these however, they are usually generous.

Some lives are like a foot-print in the hard rock, enduring forever; and some are like a foot-print in the sand, to be erased by the coming tide.

PASTE THAT WILL KEEP.—Take one table-spoonsful of flour, add gradually one pint of cold water; boil slowly, and stir well, to prevent burning, till it thickens. Keep it boiling till it becomes thin; then add one teaspoonful of nitro-muriatic acid, and boil till it again thickens, when it is ready for use. This paste is harmless, cheap, and will neither turn sour nor mould.

"It was just too delightful," exclaimed the happy girl, as she came bounding into her mother's presence with glowing cheeks and sparkling eyes. "I never enjoyed a sleigh-ride so much in all my life." "But the air was so keen, Eliza, I hope you kept your muff to your face." "Mother," returned Eliza, turning upon her venerable parent a pair of eyes that were incapable of dissembling, "I will not deceive you! Charley's moustache was warmer than the muff."

A despondent chap in one of our country towns determined to put an end to his miserable existence. He hit upon freezing as the proper method, as its sensations, after numbness, are pronounced by authority as most pleasing. He went out one bitter cold night, got into a water butt to await developments. He only staid a little while and then went in and sat by the stove, remarking that "It was too darn cold" and that he would "wait till a warmer night."

An editor who had worked fourteen hours a day for five years, moulding public opinion with pen, paste and shears, was given a government position in Washington less than a year ago, the duties of his office imposing three hours' light labor per day. Before he had been in office six months he was off on a vacation for the benefit of his health, which according to a newspaper personal, was "undermined by too close attention to his official duties." There is something very queer about it, but they all do it.

'G. S." Cigars—all the rage—nothing like them—at George Stevens'.

This is the season of the year when circulars of all descriptions pour in upon the newspaper publishers. Many of them are from manufacturers of various articles, which they hope to have advertised at little or no expense to themselves. A specimen lies before us. A manufacturer of a piano-stool offers to send us one if we will insert his ad. one year. The space he wants would not only pay for a piano-stool, but for a good piano thrown in, together with a considerable quantity of the latest sheet music.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

In retiring from the editorial and business management of the Record, says O. H. Violet, we embrace the opportunity extended to us to say that we do so without a single regret. If we've injured any one during our brief journalistic career we are glad of it, and if we hurt any one's feelings we do so purposely. If we owe anybody, we are willing and ready to pay; and if anybody owes us we shall insist that it be paid instanter. We don't know anything about the newspaper business, never did and never want to, and are glad to get out of it.—Tin Cup Record.

TO REFRESH A SICK PERSON.—Add about twenty drops of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid to a quart of water, in bathing. It will give the skin a soft, pleasant and refreshing feeling and dispel the odor that fever and perspiration leaves on the body. A small quantity of the Fluid sprinkled over anything, place or vessel where there is putrescence, destroys at once the germ of all animal or vegetable poison.

FAST TRAIN.—General Manager Tucker of the Eastern and Maine Central roads has arranged for the running of a fast train between Boston and St. John, which will be put on about the first of June. The run from Boston to St. John will be made in about fifteen hours.

IMPORTANT TOTHE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

A PORTABLE ELECTRIC LIGHTER.—(Scientific American, New York, December 16, 1882.) A Portable Electric Lighter for $5.00 is being extensively sold by the Portable Electric Light Co., of 22 Water Street, Boston. It is an economical and safe apparatus for lighting for home and business purposes.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FITS A Leading London Physician establishes an office in New York for the cure of EPILEPTIC FITS. From Am. Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Ab. Meserole (late of London), who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any other living physician. His success has simply been astonishing; we have heard of cases of over 20 years' standing successfully cured by him. He has published a work on this disease, which he sends with a large bottle of his wonderful cure free to any sufferer who may send their express and P. O. Address. We advise any one wishing a cure to address Dr. AB. MESEROLE, No. 96 John St., New York.
